New Sag Harbor Rules

Private Yachts Bring The Port To The Attention Of Homeland Security

By Dan Rattiner

Last spring, Homeland Security ordered all ports in America to follow certain procedures to see to it that terrorists could not smuggle things into the country, or simply set something off that would blow up the port.

There are no freighter ports out here on the East End, but we do have six ports for small pleasure and fishing boats — Riverhead, Montauk, Hampton Bays, Shelter Island, Greenport and Sag Harbor. At some of these ports, harbormasters made inquiries about these new regulations, wondering if there was something they needed to do. And they were told no, it's only for ports that take in oceangoing freighters of 150 feet in length or up.

But then, in June, some officers from Homeland Security DID show up at Sag Harbor, curious about three vessels that were there at the time. They were not freighters. But they were all over 150 feet in length — giant pleasure palaces owned by billionaires and wealthy celebrities — making Sag Harbor a port of call.

Going to rent a boat in Sag Harbor to take it out fishing? Make sure you know where you're supposed to be fishing.

This was sort of a wakeup call for Ed Swensen, the Sag Harbor harbormaster, who met the homeland security officers and showed them around — the three ships were cleared — and who learned that the rules were now being extended to include ANY ships over 150 feet in length. And if the other five ports of call on the East End did not have any, well, Sag Harbor had plenty. As many as thirty yachts meeting these specifications come into slips in Sag Harbor in the summertime. It's quite a sight. At the foot of Long Wharf and tied up along Bay Street, their size seems to almost match the entire town.

Swensen was given a thick book about the Maritime Transportation Security Plan, and he was told to put this plan into action as soon as possible. There was no time frame, but he was told the completed plan had to be in effect by the spring of 2005.

And so, at this time, there are three trained safety officers patrolling the docks at Sag

Harbor. And by next spring, there will be a total of eight. As for the requirements of the ships and the port, I will get to them at the end of this article.

Interestingly, there have been two occasions in our history when enemies have landed on eastern Long Island during wartime — one of them that did not succeed, in 1942 in Amagansett, and the other, a surprise attack in 1777 at Sag Harbor, which was a success. So there is a precedent here.

The surprise attack took place during the night, in late May of 1777. Hundreds were killed in the gun battle, the place was set afire, and the attackers took 26 prisoners. It is known as Meigs Raid.

Keeping peace and order in Sag Harbor at the time was the British Navy. There were many man-of-war ships along Long Wharf and numerous other gunships either in slips or anchored just offshore. There were also guards posted.

At the time, as the Revolutionary War raged, all of Long Island was occupied from one end to the other by the British. The British had lost control of Massachusetts and Connecticut. But here, the Redcoats had defeated General Washington in Brooklyn at what was known as the Battle of Long Island, and Washington and his troops fled. The British ruled.

The attackers, led by a Colonel Meigs from Connecticut, consisted of about fifty American rebels. They rowed a group of long boats across Long Island Sound at nightfall, crossed the North Fork by carrying their long boats across the narrow sandy strip of what is now called Truman Beach in Orient, then rowed across from Orient to Sag Harbor in complete darkness to beach their boats at Long Beach, Sag Harbor. They then walked in silence to Long Wharf two miles away, overwhelmed the guards, set fire to the Wharf, the stores of material and the ammunition dump — which exploded — took 28 prisoners and then retreated back to Connecticut. It was a complete success.

The landing at Amagansett also took place at night. A Nazi submarine surfaced just offshore, and four Nazi saboteurs were rowed ashore in a rubber boat by some of the German sailors from the submarine. The saboteurs, dressed in Nazi uniforms, landed here with dozens of wooden boxes containing supplies, such as dynamite, grenades, maps and quantities of American currency. In the boxes were also fishing tackle and the typical clothing worn by American surfcasters. The men changed into these clothes and buried the uniforms in the boxes.

What caused this mission to fail was a Homeland Security System ordered by President Roosevelt, in place on the entire coastline of this country. Private citizens with oceanfront homes were given military binoculars and told to report any suspicious maritime behavior. Some of them worked shifts doing this, and then, at night, stayed indoors while armed Coast Guardsmen walked the beaches.

While the spies were burying the boxes, they were stumbled upon by an American Coastguardsman named George Cullen who was on such a patrol. He was armed with a pistol that was on his hip in a leather case, and he did not take it out because what he saw were a bunch of American fishermen, complete with rubber waders, rods and reels, fishing. What did seem odd was that they were burying wooden boxes and packing up.

The leader of the Nazi mission, a man named George Dasch, approached Cullen and spoke to him. He did not even have a trace of an accent. He told Cullen the obvious, which was that they were just surfcasters, but then, seeing that Cullen did not seem convinced, he offered Cullen a bribe. He handed Cullen $350 and he told Cullen to forget what he saw. Cullen then ran back to the Coast Guard station a mile away, showed the officers the money and reported exactly what he saw. A call went out, immediately, to nearby Army bases in Montauk and Westhampton.

Meanwhile, the Nazis, who had come here to

What The Rest Of The Country Is Thinking As Elections Arrive

By Dan Rattiner

I flew to Midland, Texas the other day on a family matter, which is a small city in the middle of oil well country. As we are approaching the elections and hearing people saying most of us on the coasts have no idea what the midlands are thinking about, I thought it would be a good idea to report back.

> ...other than a pawn shop, a checks cashed store and a bus stop, all of it, even the hotel, was abandoned

From the air, Texas stretches out in one long flat landscape from their big east coast cities, heading west. It seems to go forever. Approaching Midland, I asked the flight attendant about something strange I saw down below out the window — dirt roads that wove their way through the parched ground, to end in small, cleared, dirt rectangles with a black dot at the center. There were thousands of them.

"Oil wells," she said.

We banked into an approach. There was not a steer, or a cowboy or a ranch in sight. Just these black steel oil rigs, ten foot tall bobbing steel birds, rocking back and forth and sucking out the precious black substance that runs our country.

Midland is a city of 80,000 people and features in its center three modern skyscrapers, twelve or fifteen stories tall that keep watch over all this nothing all around. We rented a car and drove to a small town forty miles away. The drive was ruler-straight, down a divided six-lane superhighway, parallel to a railroad track. There was little traffic, but what there was consisted mostly of semi-tractor trailer trucks traveling at seventy miles an hour and battered pickup trucks driven by men in cowboy hats. Forty miles goes fast at seventy miles an hour. One minute you are here, the next there. Twice along the way we passed a Union Pacific freight train riding alongside us. One had more than 200 cars. The other 150. I counted. This is a workingman's community. This is not a tourist destination.

In fact, there is not much of anything, or even anything to do, in central Texas. But here, in October, high school football is big. Among the stations playing country western on my car radio, there were several whose sportscasters were interviewing high school football coaches at great length. It was going to be a big year for Odessa High. Friday night was indeed going to be tough. The star quarterback had come out for practice without his helmet the other morning, and coach had to send him back to get it.

"But I'm on the injured list," the coach said in a falsetto, mimicking the quarterback. Laughter followed. "I told him, you come out on a football field, you wear a football helmet. That's the way it is. Right? I remember two years ago when at a practice Coach Gaines got knocked head over teakettle, clipboard flying, when he got hit aside the head with a pass that went wide."

"Had to go to the hospital?"

"Nah."

No select sound bites here.

The small town we went to, Big Spring, Texas, had one main drag which was a four mile long strip mall with seven traffic lights, a McDonalds at one end, a Wal-Mart at the other, and in between, a Burger King, a Domino's, a Taco Bell, a few Texas bars and all sorts of businesses about automobiles. Brake and Lube. Toyota showrooms. Gas stations. Auto parts. I soon learned that this strip mall had taken all the business away from what had, fifty years ago, been a solidly built, thriving small town of department stores, churches, movie theatres, municipal buildings, even a twelve story hotel. It all occupied a ten block long by fifteen block wide grid of streets that sat exactly adjacent to the strip road. The exact center of this town was Fourth and Main Streets. But other than a pawn shop, a checks cashed store and a bus stop, all of it, even the hotel, was abandoned.

As for where to drive to enjoy the beauty of this place, well, there wasn't any of that either. There was a park with a pond. "That used to be the spring," I was told. But the pond had overflowed its banks to create gooey mud all around, and the whole back half of the park was taken up by eight tennis courts. There were no flowers, not much of anything green. A few trees struggled in the park. Mostly it was dirt, stones and a few patches of grass.

The people of both Midland and Big Spring are polite and friendly and they live a slow paced life that the east and west coasts have not seen in forty years. The concerns are about family and neighbors, the election — Bush is their hometown boy — TV and work. Church is very important, too. They volunteer, they give to charities. Prices are very low by our standards. It cost us $5.99 for all you can eat at an Italian restaurant.

A very big deal in this part of the world right now is the war. In the Dallas Airport, you see soldiers in freshly starched camouflage fatigues everywhere. They clomp along in heavy hiking boots and carry their backpacks, all identical, all regulation. The men have buzz cuts and the women have their hair braided tight or cut short too. You'd have to call them men and women. But they are really just boys and girls, mostly eighteen to twenty one, from what I could see. And they are bound for Iraq.

"They're putting us up in a hotel tonight," one young woman said cheerfully over her cell phone to her mother who was apparently not far away. "We're shipping out in the morning. Same schedule. Just everything pushed back."

At the end of our weekend trip, leaving from Midland Airport to go back to Dallas, we stood at the check-in counter in the big, empty terminal that oil money built and we talked to the woman behind the counter. Few people were around.

But then we became aware of two people standing about six feet behind us. They would be next. Or rather, he would be.

She was a beautiful, dark-haired young woman of about twenty. Her eyes were red. Her hand stroked the cheek of the man with her, a clean-shaven, buzz-cut, young soldier. And she held him close for a moment, then pulled away and looked up at him. When would she see him again?

We finished getting our boarding passes and walked to the gate.

Soon, he appeared at the gate. On the plane, he sat directly behind me, next to the window. And then I saw, coming to sit by him, a slender, small Japanese man in a business suit carrying a shiny black briefcase. After takeoff for Dallas, I sat back and listened to them talk. Or tried to. The Japanese man spoke softly and with such an accent I could not make out any of it due to the rush of the engine. But I could figure it all out just listening to the soldier.

"Iraq," he said. "From Dallas, I go directly over. 27 hours on the plane. This is my second tour. I was there seven months. Then two weeks home on leave. Now I go back to finish up. I have to complete a year. Then I can retire. Think? I don't know. I'm not supposed to think. I do what I'm told. But they seemed to have liked their dictator. It's mostly about politics I think.

"I'm a high school science teacher. Been in the National Guard for eleven years, then this is my twelfth and last. But I have to complete a year in Iraq. Some people I know complete the twelfth year while they are in Iraq and so therefore are 'retired.' But you can't be mustered out until you finish the year there.

"If I don't go?" He laughed. "They'd send the police after me. But they don't have to. I'm going to do my job over there. I have a wife I have to take care of. I have to think of her. I'll be home in just five more months."

They sat quietly for a while, then as we came in for a landing to Dallas, he had this to say to the other man.

"How many black belts are there? Wow. Nine. Who'd a thought? When did you get your first one? Thirteen? That's great.

"So you write a book and when that's done, you write another one. Washington, D. C.? I live and teach in Odessa here where I grew up. I can afford Odessa. Did you see those prices they have in Dallas?"

I was not the only person who had listened to this conversation. The plane landed. As we stood up in the aisle, waiting for the bulkhead door to open, an older man with a grey ponytail who had been sitting across the aisle spoke to the soldier.

"I'm just coming from a Veterans Convention. Anything you need. Call me. Here's my card. A mortgage. Whatever. We can help you. Call me when you get back."

The black belt handed the soldier his card, too, and said, "If you get to Washington, D. C. please look me up."

The soldier looked over. Our eyes met. "I'm going to say a prayer for you every day," I said. "I see your name tag."

"First name's Joe," he said, smiling. We disembarked. And the last I saw him he was going on ahead of me, head up, making great strides down the gate. •

Red Sox

The Biggest Comeback In The History Of Baseball Continues On

By Dan Rattiner

After the Red Sox lost three games in a row to the Yankees in the playoffs for the American League pennant, most people wrote them off. No team, having suffered such a great indignity, had ever risen from the ashes to win the next four games in a row. Surely the Red Sox would just slink off in embarrassment.

I was not one of those who thought this. I had even more malevolent thoughts about what would happen to the Red Sox.

"The Red Sox will win the next three," I said, "then in the ninth inning of the seventh and deciding game, leading by one run, the Yankees will get runners on first and second, but then offer up two easy outs. With just one more out to go, the next Yankee batter will come up, get two strikes on him and then offer up a simple bouncer to short. The Red Sox shortstop will bobble it, then kick it into the outfield and by the time anybody gets it, the Yankees will have scored two runs and won."

Thus was the level of incompetence and self-humiliation that I predicted for this star crossed team. They have not won a World Series since 1918. And they have suffered indignities such as this in the past.

And so it was that a group of us, having seen the Red Sox come back to tie it up by winning the next three, assembled in Manhattan to watch the seventh and deciding game of the American League pennant race on television. At the same time we watched it, we kept in touch by cell phone with a group of our children, all in college, who were watching it on television, but in Boston.

Frankly, I thought the game was about as exciting an entertainment as I had ever seen. It was as good as any movie, any Broadway show, any book.

But it did not appear on our various TV

CONVICTED SHELTER ISLAND MAN SET FREE

By Dan Rattiner

A Shelter Island man, who was convicted four years ago of shooting and killing another Shelter Island man, has now had his conviction overturned by the State Court of Appeals. Though the man confessed to the shooting and is currently serving 25 years to life in a prison upstate, the matter has been thrown out, and the killer set free because of what the judge says is a misunderstood legal definition of the term "depraved indifference."

The killing, which took place on April 27, 1998, was and is the only case of murder ever to take place on Shelter Island in its 350 year history.

It occurred after a newcomer to the island named Curtis Cook was arrested and accused of molesting an 8-year-old island girl. After the arrest, but before the trial, it was determined that Curtis was a previously convicted child molester with a history of this behavior.

Cook, who was 20, had moved into a house on South Ferry Road, next door to a longtime resident Kenneth Payne, who was raising his own 8 year old daughter. He had befriended Cook, not knowing his background. Now, learning of the arrest and Cook's background, and noting that the girl he was accused of molesting was a playmate of his daughter, he picked up a shotgun that morning, walked next door and when Cook answered his knock, shot him in the chest, killing him.

At his trial, which took place the following year, District Attorney Spota was wrestling with two kinds of charges that seemed appropriate to level at Payne in this case, Intentional Murder and Depraved Indifference. Lawyers for the D. A. said that in this unusual case, the definitions of these charges seemed to overlap, and it would be better if he chose one and not the other. He chose Depraved Indifference.

In the recent ruling which overturned the conviction, the Court of Appeals ruled that Payne could not be convicted of Depraved Indifference because that charge is reserved for "reckless conduct that creates a grave risk of death to another person," and could really only be used when someone fired into a crowd for similar behavior.

In addition to the above, the court ruled that Payne should have been charged with Intentional Murder, and because he had not, he screens at the same time. I noticed this talking to one of the boys. We were both watching on Fox, and as the game progressed I could not miss the fact that the commentators speaking on our TV and on the TV up in Boston were not in unison. I mentioned this to my son, Gabriel. At first, he didn't know what I was talking about.

"Let me say what the announcer is saying as he says it," I said. "Damon is coming to the plate. He has been having the worst series ever, without any doubt."

"We are getting the game first, by a few seconds," Gabriel said.

"Must be some sort of technical glitch," I said. "Tell me who wins. So we know ahead of time."

It has long been apparent that the Yankees, as individual ballplayers, are much better than the ragtag bunch that plays for the Red Sox. Nevertheless, here in the seventh game, the Red Sox built this huge lead. It was up to five runs by the fourth inning. And yet, we were always waiting for the roof to fall in. No Red Sox lead would ever be enough to hold off our beloved Yankees.

Now it was the top of the eighth inning, the Red Sox coming to bat, with a six run lead, 9 to 3.

"It's really over," one of our group said.

"They need more," I said.

They did get one more. Now it was 10 to 3. Then the Yankees came up in the bottom of the inning and I was just dead sure they were going to rally to win. They didn't.

I have been a longtime Met fan, and before that a Brooklyn Dodger fan. I have never much liked the Yankees. But with the Mets virtually dead, and the Yankees in the thick of it, I did shift over to become a Yankee fan, a tepid Yankee fan. Now, for some reason, I realized that in spite of myself, I was rooting for the Red Sox. The thought alarmed me. Why was I doing that?

Frankly, there were old feelings stirring. When I was a little boy, I worshiped the Brooklyn Dodgers. My dad took me to Ebbetts Field to watch them play all the time. I loved the entire lineup. I was eight years old. They were Reese, Robinson, Hodges, Snider, Campanella, Cox, Amoros, and Furillo. And they were consistently the best team in the National League. Yet when the National met the American League in the World Series, the Yankees always won. I hated the Yankees.

Until I was fourteen and my interests shifted to girls, the Yankees played the Dodgers in three World Series and the outcome was always the same. And if you looked back to the beginning of the century when the Brooklyn team was formed, they had NEVER won a World Series. Not one.

What had I done, hooking up with this team?

Now these old root-for-the-underdog feelings were coming to the surface with the Red Sox.

Red Sox captain Johnny Damon, with his wild hair and bushy beard, simply could not hit the ball properly during the first six games. He was up 28 times. Had one scraggly little hit. It made you wonder why the manager, Terry Francona, left him in? It made no sense.

After I realized I was a Red Sox fan, which happened in the eighth inning which was about four innings after I had unconsciously begun rooting for them, I kept thinking that Francona was just an awful manager, and would surely screw things up. He's been known to leave tired pitchers in too long. They'd get clobbered.

He's been known to put in pinch hitters whose appearance defied logic. Certainly, he was wrong to leave Damon in as long as he did.

Also, he looks like a plumber. The kind of plumber who charges you double, does the job wrong, and then charges you again to fix it.

And yet, for this crucial seventh game, Johnny Damon simply exploded at the bat. His first time up, he hit a grand slam home run. His second time up he hit a two run home run. As the teams went to the bottom of the ninth, Damon had been responsible for getting six of his team's ten runs.

Something else that had impressed me was what he had said after the Sox had lost the first three games. Damon had been up twelve times. Was zero for twelve. "We really thought we had put together a team this year that could do the job," he told a reporter. "We really did. And so I think we still can."

And so that is what happened. When the Yankees came up in the bottom of the ninth, their bats were quiet and it was they who went meekly out into the night in defeat.

After it was over, I went out to walk my dog. New York City streets were as they always were. People going about their business. There seemed to be no depression, no unhappiness, no emotions one way or another about what had just happened. You wouldn't have thought anybody had watched this game, although fifty million had and half the city of New York had. So they lost. They could take it. They're grown ups. And it's only a game.

Up in Boston, there were riots in the street, drunken fistfights, people turning over automobiles, police firing rubber bullets and tear gas, people throwing burning toilet paper, people screaming with joy. One person died, twenty-seven were injured, including one police officer whose nose was broken by a flying beer bottle.

I called Gabriel in Boston the next morning.

"My first question is — are you okay?"

"Sure."

"And my next question is — who won?"

"What do you mean?"

"It's still the bottom of the eighth here."

We have the Curse, the Revenge, and we have Who's Your Daddy. And now one of the greatest sporting events in history. St. Louis, in my view, hasn't got a chance. • could not be charged with either offense in the future because of constitutional laws that would protect him from double jeopardy.

The day after this ruling, an attempt to apply this ruling to a different case took place, unsuccessfully, in Nassau County. That case involved two men and a woman they both loved.

On February 12, 2000, Mario Flores, 24, drove a girl friend named Lesly Santiago to Carol Street in Lakeview to pick up Lesly's daughter who was with a baby sitter there. Parking in front of the house, the pair were approached by Hector Navarete, 33, who began screaming at Flores there in the driver's seat. He approached Flores, and Flores pulled out a gun and fired twice. One shot went wild but the second shot hit Santiago, wounding him and sending him to the ground. Flores then got out of the car and shot him in the head.

Flores was accused of Reckless Endangerment, just as Payne was, and at the end of the trial, the jury went out to deliberate the charge. While they were out, the decision about the Shelter Island appeal came in, and the Nassau County prosecutor in the Flores case asked the judge to change the charge to Intentional Murder. When the judge refused to do that, the defense lawyer asked that the case be thrown out based on the Shelter Island case. The judge denied that too, and several hours later the jury returned with a verdict of guilty on the charge of Reckless Endangerment. Flores will be sentenced December 6 and could receive 25 years to life, just as Payne originally did. •

A Battle Of Words On The Montauk Highway In Wainscott

By Emily J Weitz

It all started when John Kerry swung into town on his fundraising trail, raising millions of dollars at a big fundraiser at a mansion on David's Lane in East Hampton. It was a time where the Democrats of the East End were out in full force to support their candidate, and the voice of George W. Bush was a soft murmur resounding from somewhere in the fields of Texas. But there are two faces to every town, and while the Republicans seemed to be getting swallowed up in the frothy wake of John Kerry, their voices were still sounding.

It was a sunny Saturday during that summer weekend that I drove up Route 27 from East Hampton, past the sunflower fields that were only just opening their eyes to the sky back then. And there it was, on my left: a sign of Republican life in what had seemed to me like a Democratic Mecca. And when I say a sign, I mean a sign. A massive white billboard branded with black paint: "Kerry, Go Home." After I passed, I turned around in my seat (risking life and limb, I might add) and saw that the other side of the sign had a little Republican quip. "Where is John Kerry? He's out making waffles." I have to admit, it took me a minute to get that one. Ha. Ha.

Ken Schwenk is the owner of the property, from the sunflower fields to the baby blue pickup truck to the massive white signs to the black and red paint. His message is clear. There aren't much plainer words he could have employed than his initial, "Kerry, Go Home." And they made an impact. In this land that is so often taken for granted as a hotbed of left-wing liberals, there is diversity. And not just diversity of Democrats, but diversity of politics. This conflict of opinions has ascended to a public forum, not in an organized debate with a moderator and an audience of emotionless faces. This disparity

DAN'S PAPERS POLITICAL ENDORSEMENTS 2004

By Dan Rattiner

One of the first things that the Bush administration did when they got into office in 2000 was to announce that they were disengaging from talks involving the Israelis and the Palestinians. Our negotiators were summoned home. They were told they would not return and that the Israelis and Palestinians would just have to work things out for themselves. America would be taking a more insular view of its role in the world. We had many problems at home.

The result of this unilateral announcement was that both the Israelis and the Palestinians lost the big brother that could get between them, provide calm judgement and help them sort things out.

It was an amazing thing to do considering the importance of the region and the flashpoint war possibilities that might have followed, and it would not be until two years passed and the warring had surged out of control that the Bush administration once again sent in a cabinet level intermediary. Leaving them alone had been a disastrous decision.

This presidential election should really be considered on the merits of the decisions that has taken for its stage the soil that produces our ripe tomatoes and our sweet corn. Mr. Schwenk wanted a voice, not by standing and spouting his opinions to a yawning crowd, but by leaving a mark on the road that is both the vein and the main artery of the East End. What more conspicuous place is there? If you want to go to Wainscott, East Hampton, Amagansett, or Montauk, you are going to know how Mr. Schwenk feels about politics. That's his freedom of expression. But the story doesn't end there.

The signs were increasing as the days went on, I noticed. It seemed that every day something changed, though you could never quite remember what. The message of anti-Kerry sentiment remained unwavering. The presidential debates heated up the political climate as the natural climate cooled. The house on Rte. 27 continued spouting personal politics as hundreds of cars headed to and from work. Students pressed curious faces against the windows of school buses and saw the one fact that shone: freedom of expression lives.

Republicans knocked on Mr. Schwenk's door to shake his hand, to thank him. Democrats who had formerly been dumbfounded that there was even a contest that Bush might still make his way back to the White House, found their explanation. And they too responded.

Some Democrats shook their heads, some laughed. Several times I've seen a middle finger dart out of a sunroof in the car ahead of me waving as the flow of the highway sweeps their car and their defiant fingers away. But some Democrats took a less passive stance. Some retaliated.

Sprayed in blood red across Mr. Schwenk's pure white barn one morning were the cryptic words, "Bush lies." Now those who had seen Mr. Schwenk's opinion stand alone had a wrench thrown in. Later that day, Mr. Schwenk took his white paintbrush and slowly erased the trace of discrepancy. But one of Mr. Schwenk's signs was defaced, and instead of removing it entirely, Mr. Schwenk left the remains there for us all too see. He wrote his own words of revenge, "Defaced by liberal democratz." Then one day I was cruising up Route 27, on my way to work, sipping on coffee, and I saw the results of a particularly heated battle in the nighttime warfare between Mr. Schwenk and the anonymous Democrats who couldn't bear the thought of four more years of Bush.

"F*$@ Bush."

A few days passed before the paintbrush, still wet with the paint of heated democracy, was dipped in white again, and Mr. Schwenk quieted the controversy with a few strokes of his brush. But hundreds of cars zipped up and down 27 in those few days, and we all saw a Democrat's frustration standing red against the white backdrop of a Republican's wall.

It's brutal on the campaign trails, it's tense in the swing states. But even here in our peaceful towns the gap between Democrats and Republicans is widening. In the minds of people on both sides, the election of the other would be calamitous.

Democrats and Republicans, rich and poor, local and summer. We all fit into a category, even if many of us dance the noncommittal line in the middle. It happens that the future of our world depends on which side of the line we've landed on. Politics is no longer taboo. Not now, when both sides are so frightened about what will become of us if the opponent wins.

Freedom of speech and freedom of expression are two of the ideals that our country holds dearest. But don't expect that if you take that stand, you won't be questioned. Undermined. Maybe even disrespected. Across the country, people are taking sides, partially defining themselves by men they've never met.

Only a few days remain until the fate of our country is decided. Stay tuned to the news, be informed and check your local barnyard to see how the political climate of the United States of America attempts to resolve itself through our basic liberties: expression and dissent.

Our Intrepid Reporter Interviews Some Six Year Olds In Eastport

By Janet Berg

Welcome to BOOVILLE, U.S.A. Bats, and Goblins, and Ghosts. . .OH MY! Cats, and Vampires, and Witches OH MY! OH MY! OH MY! So, it's that time of year again, when we see children everywhere, dressed in bright outfits, scurrying and floating by our window, alongside colorful falling leaves.

There's still a twinge of excitement, remembering the 31st of October, as a child of the 50s, when we walked up and down every street in the neighborhood in our homemade costumes, promising ourselves to fill our pillowcases to the tippy-top with assorted, sticky candy.

Of course, kids can be pretty clever when it comes to collecting the goods. We knew "which" house to go to for the BEST stuff. I remember going back home five or six times for a change of disguise, and ringing that same doorbell over and over again. Our voices were muffled under the masks when we repeated our request, "Trick or Treat!"

> A sweet little boy named Cameron Watson, age 5: "I'm going to be Harry Potter . . . he's cool, and wear the glasses, too."

One year my teenage sister, with her long dark hair, dressed herself up in a tight-fitting tube dress and high-heels, and was promptly escorted by Sister Mary Katherine to the main office in Catholic School, where Father John reprimanded her.

"Lady of the what?" she cried. But, I'm supposed to be Cher."

Later, that night, my brother, Mr. Impromptu, ran upstairs, and came back down again, in two seconds flat, rarin' to go, in a red velour bathrobe and a makeshift crown. "I am supposed to be King," he announced.

Of course, being the youngest, I was always the brunt of their jokes; I allowed them to tape a couple of pairs of our father's underwear around my body, and stick some artificial apples, bananas and grapes in my hair and – voila!

"I'm supposed to be . . . ummm , what did you say I am?"

"They'd nudge me, and whisper it in my ear after someone answered the doorbell. "Oh, I'm supposed to be "Miss Fruit of the Loom!"

We'd also bob for apples, tell ghost stories, and celebrate Autumn with customs and rituals of the "olden days." How did this tradition start anyway? And, why do people walk around wearing weird costumes and go trick-or-treating, and carve out pumpkins?

Halloween originated centuries ago, but the custom of trick-or-treating comes from Ireland hundreds of years ago, when the Irish hollowed out pumpkins and placed lighted candles inside to scare away the spirits from their home, and keep cold winters away. It was when starving Irish farmers went from house to house begging for something to eat, and threatening those who refused to give any, "You treat me, or else I will trick you!"

The custom was brought to America in the 1840s by Irish immigrants fleeing their country's potato famine. And, for the next 100 years or so, it was harmless fun to be parading around in costumes, or judged in contests for originality; being the coolest; the scariest; the funniest; the sweetest; the prettiest; the spookiest; and the most outstanding.

It's a shame that the celebration sometimes has so much negative connotation. We shouldn't really 'get the jitters' over this holiday, as for the most part, it's just meant for little kids to dress up and have some fun, and shouldn't be taken so seriously. It is a time when families can bond, creatively, getting ready for the big day, so their little angels, or friendly little ghosts can run up the walkways where a porch light is left on, and the rustling, dead leaves, crunching under their feet, and the wind whistles in the blackness of the night.

Some of the older kids try and make it even more exciting and mischievous with a can of shaving cream and a dozen eggs, so most parents don't let their young children out by themselves. Like most holidays, it has become too commercialized, and has changed over the past 50 years.

But, have no fear, even when celebrating modern Halloween, kids will be kids, no matter what . . .

I just had to ask a few of our local boys and girls some questions about this strrrrange time of year, and this is how they replied:

Q: WHEN DID HALLOWEEN START AND WHERE?

A: Courtney Watson, 7-years old, of Eastport: "Halloween started a long time ago at a haunted house in, uuuuh, Canada . . . in Toronto."

Q: WHAT DOES HALLOWEEN MEAN?

A: Genieveve Herbert, 7-years old, from Eastport: "It means you play games and dress up and . . .

Others: "And, GET CANDY!"

Q: WHO STARTED HALLOWEEN?

A: Genieveve, Age 7: "I forget his name, but it's a man with brown puffy hair."

Q: WHY DO PEOPLE DRESS UP IN COSTUMES?

A: Noah LeBrun, 8-years-old, of East Moriches: "So, you can . . .

"GET CANDY!" everyone shouted, again, making Noah snicker.

A: "So, we can have Halloween parties," someone else added.

Q: WHAT KIND OF HALLOWEEN COSTUMES DID THEY HAVE MANY MANY YEARS AGO?

A: Christopher Durst, 8-years-old, of East Moriches: "They were DRA-COOOO-LA, the Headless Horseman, and Frankenstein."

Q: WHAT KIND OF COSTUMES DO YOU THINK PEOPLE WILL WEAR IN THE FUTURE?

A: Christopher Durst, again: "They will do it electronically, where they can actually turn into the person they want to be.'

Q: WHY DO YOU THINK SOME PEOPLE LOVE GETTING SPOOKED?

A: Leland Qua (one of the 6-year-old twins from Remsenburg): "I don't know – I'm too busy, coloring."

Q: WHO'S THIS YOU'RE COLORING?

A: Leland, Age 6: "This is a lifeguard. He has pink patches all over his skin." (This must be where he forgot to apply the suntan lotion.)

Q: WHY DID YOU MAKE A LIFEGUARD? I ask, observing the whistle hanging from his neck.

A: Leland, Age 6: "I like lifeguards because they save people . . . like Super Heroes."

A: Daniel Qua, Age 6 (Leland's twin brother): "Like Spiderman. He fights the bad people."

Q: HOW OLD ARE YOU AND WHO ARE YOU GOING TO BE?

A: A sweet little boy named Cameron Watson, Age 5: "I'm going to be Harry Potter . . . he's cool, and wear the glasses, too."

Q: DOES ANYONE HAVE A HOMEMADE COSTUME?

A: Courtney, Age 7: "My mom always made all my costumes, except for this year. Last year I was a princess with a blue velvet dress, and I wore a crown with a veil on the back of it. It was beeeautiful!"

Meanwhile, Christopher starts a whole dissertation with: "A long long time ago, there was this creepy guy . . . when people went to sleep, he came into their dreams . . . there was a scream . . . and he ends the story with, "the kid was never heard from again." Hee Hee — Ha Ha — Ha!!!"

All the kids roared with laughter. "We can't wait for Halloween!"

Prosecution Presents New Testimony In The Ammon Murder Trial

By David Stoll

This week at the trial of Daniel Pelosi in Riverhead, several witnesses have offered evidence in support of the prosecution's case against Daniel Pelosi for the murder of Ted Ammon in East Hampton. Tracey Riebenfeld, Pelosi's former girlfriend, testified Tuesday, October 26 that Pelosi confessed to the murder of Ted Ammon in January 2002. Pelosi allegedly told Riebenfeld that after he "bashed [Ammon's] [expletive] brains in with a flashlight and lamp," Ammon begged for his life. According to Riebenfeld, after telling her this, Pelosi then twisted her arm and told her that if she ever mentioned it to anyone, she would never see her children again. When defense attorney Gerald Shargel questioned why she never went to the police, she said she loved Pelosi and thought they had a future together. She said that this time, she was telling the truth.

John Kundle, the owner of Safeguard Alarm Co., testified that Pelosi hired him in early 2001 to add a surveillance system of eight tiny cameras around the house. He explained that the hard drive which controlled the system—and which was missing following the murder—was hidden away in a rarely used area of the mansion. Ammon was not aware of the upgrades, including the hard drive. Kundle said that he did not tell anyone where the hard drive was hidden, other than Pelosi and a contractor who installed telephone wires to allow remote access to the system. Even the police needed Kundle's help to find the location after the murder.

Pelosi's father, Robert, appeared voluntarily to testify that Pelosi had asked him how to throw away something so it could never be found—during the day following Ammon's murder. The father said he does not know whether Pelosi is guilty, and he "didn't want to know" what Pelosi wanted to hide. Later, Pelosi told his father that a friend "took care of it". Pelosi's attorney engaged in aggressive questioning, suggesting that Robert blamed Pelosi for the death of another son, James Pelosi. James, a police officer, was being investigated by the NYPD's internal affairs division for something (not specified) he did at Pelosi's request, at a time when Pelosi was a suspect. James died of a seizure during that investigation.

A friend of Pelosi's testified that he accompanied Pelosi to buy a stun gun sometime before the murder. Prosecutors say that Ammon was stunned with a stun gun before being beaten to death in his bedroom. Another friend testified that, a year earlier, Pelosi told him that he planned to get Ammon's money. At the time Pelosi was getting divorced and had no money. Over drinks, he said he would become involved with and marry Ammon's estranged wife, Generosa, and then "bash his brains in while he's sleeping." The friend did not take it seriously.

One of Ammon's attorneys testified that Ammon and Generosa had reached agreement about financial terms of their divorce just days before the murder, although it had not yet been signed. Ammon was not nearly as wealthy as he once had been, due to severe financial losses; the agreement called for the couple to split his $46 million net worth evenly. She inherited it all upon his death. The attorney also testified that Generosa had been spending a great deal of money before Ammon's death. Among other things, she had spent the proceeds of a $3 million loan to renovate her apartment, and substantial work remained, and she had run up a $300,000 bill at the Stanhope hotel, where she was living during the renovations.

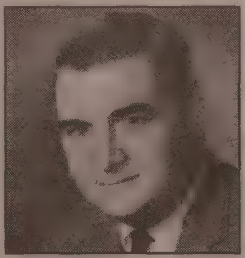
A crime scene investigator identified four sets of fingerprints in Ammon's mansion as Pelosi's, including one on a stereo tuner inside a cabinet containing the power source for the surveillance system. It was unplugged the night of the murder. However, the investigator admitted he could not tell how long the print had been there. Most of the other prints belonged to Ammon, Generosa and their children, although three prints could not be identified. None of Pelosi's prints were found in the master bedroom where the murder took place.

Meanwhile, Clayton Moultrie, one of the inmates to whom Pelosi is alleged to have confessed in tape-recorded conversations, was arrested in Charleston, South Carolina, and charged with robbery and assault.

PIERRE SALINGER, 79

By Dan Rattiner

Pierre Salinger died last week at his home in Le Thor, France at the age of 79. He was an important player in recent American history, serving as White House Press Secretary for President John F. Kennedy and for a little while thereafter, under President Johnson. He was also a Senator, a TV correspondent and a newspaperman.



Salinger was born in San Francisco, the son of a man who was a Jewish mining engineer and a woman who was a French Catholic. His mother was also the daughter of a member of the French Parliament. Salinger attended San Francisco State, then served in the Pacific during World War II for two years, then returned home to begin a career as a newspaper reporter. One of his stories, an expose, came to the attention of Bobby Kennedy, and Salinger soon joined the Kennedy staff at a time when John Kennedy was a senator. Thus he was in line to be named Press Secretary.

A witty, sophisticated man prone to wearing loud vests, he served, after his time in the White House, as a Senator from California, a TV reporter for ABC News and, after moving permanently to France, as a foreign correspondent. He also took employment with several Paris dailies.

It was in this capacity that he became, briefly, an important individual involving a story on eastern Long Island. In 1995, TWA 800, having just taken off from JFK bound for Paris, exploded in the air and crashed just offshore Moriches. Rescue efforts took place, but all aboard perished.

Many of those on the ground in Moriches and Westhampton Beach said that at the time of the explosion, which occurred at sunset, they saw rising up from the sea and heading for the plane an arc of light that could have been nothing else but a guided missile.

Intensive investigations occurred trying to determine if that could have been the case, but they were inconclusive at best. The government finally concluded that the explosion had been caused by a buildup of flammable fumes in a central fuselage gas tank.

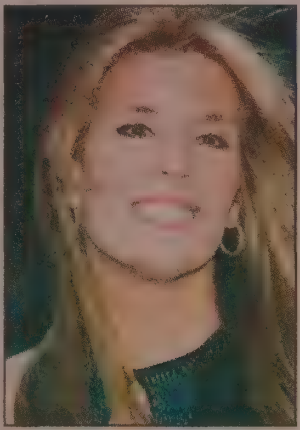
About six months after the investigation results were made public, Pierre Salinger also went public with a video from an American ground control guidance facility which he said showed the rising guided missile. He said he had gotten it from the French aviation industry which had obtained it from their counterparts in America. He spoke to me at this newspaper about his find, calling from Paris, and I wrote about it. It created quite a stir. In the end, however, the FAA said that this had already had been investigated and accounted for. He was able to find no allies in this claim from any reputable investigating body, either for or against the missile theory, and it was, in the end, a great embarrassment for him.

In the end, he was living with his fourth wife, who with him was running a bed and breakfast in Le Thor. A lover of high culture, fine wines, women and song, he will be missed.•

review: jill rappaport

By Ali Spencer

Beautiful photographs, horses and celebrities, plus, a picture of Robert Redford on the cover. All of these things can be found in the new book, People We Know, Horses They Love, written by Jill Rappaport and Wendy Wilkinson and photographed by Linda Solomon. In this book, actors and musicians and famous equestrians talk about their experiences with horses, share anecdotes and discuss what horses mean to them.



Last weekend, Rappaport, entertainment correspondent for "The Today Show," and her sister, Linda Solomon, were at Bookhampton in East Hampton to discuss their book. Jill Rappaport has been riding horses since she was a young child, and in her interviews on the Today Show, she often works horses into the conversation. Surprised at how many celebrities share her passion for horses and have horses of their own she decided to chronicle them. All of the people in the book have also personally written about their experiences with horses.

You might be surprised, as I was, by some of the people who have horses. Guitarist Joe Perry of Aerosmith and his wife Billie, have had a decade long love affair with Friesans, black horses with long, flowing manes and tails. And Whoopi Goldberg, growing up in Manhattan, fell in love with the police horses.

For the people profiled in People We Know, Horses They Love, being with their horses is how they relax and get away from their very public lives. As anyone who has ever owned or loved a horse can understand, the bond between human and horse is a sacred and personal thing. And that sense of the bond comes through loud and clear in the pages of the book. As Rappaport said, the people she interviewed were incredibly gracious, opening up their homes and involving their families, for their stories. Leafing through the pages of the book, one gets the sense that you are looking into a very important, very private corner of the subjects lives.

And nowhere does this come across more strongly than in the photographs. Linda Solomon has done a brilliant job of capturing the relationships between the horses and their owners. Solomon does not ride, and I think this helps her to bring a fresh, objective eye when photographing a horse. Her goal, which she has definitely achieved, was to capture her subjects at their most natural. There were no makeup artists at the photo shoots and the pictures were not digitally altered to look perfect, which gives the book as very authentic feel.

My favorite pictures in the book are very intimate moments that the camera seems to be sneaking up on. There is one black and white picture of Morgan Freeman looking into his horse's eye and moving to touch the animal's face. His hands have not yet made contact with the horse, but are mere millimeters away, and the emotion and energy and tenderness is palpable.

What stands out most is how horses have profoundly changed and enhanced the lives of their owners. People talk about how horses have saved their lives, how when they are working with their horses they are completely relaxed and at peace, and how when they are on their horse's back, they are transported from the daily stress and craziness in their lives. Whether or not you are an equestrian or a horse lover, the stories that these people tell about the relationships with their horses are enlightening and inspiring.

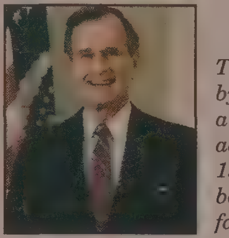
George W. Bush has made during his first four years. The future is a difficult and unknowable one. But the past we can see. I cannot recall a single President making so many bad decisions in four years, either deliberately, accidentally or by neglect, in all the time I have been following politics.

Bush's initial policy decision about the Mideast was just the first of his misjudgments. It was soon followed by dozens more. He went to war against a country that had not attacked us and was no threat to us. He withdrew most of our soldiers from Afghanistan to fight this war. He shut out all our traditional allies from the spoils of the war, unless they joined him in the fight. He lied to the U. N., and then told them when they wouldn't come along with him he'd do just fine without them. He alienated governments around the world, he has no plan for after the war. He spent on this war a huge sum while the budget surplus left to him by his predecessor turned into a huge and widening deficit, and he has no plan in place to stop this. As Commander-in-Chief, he has overseen the mistreatment of Iraqi prisoners and is actually putting on trial some of our GIs, while accepting none of the responsibility himself.

He has plunged on ahead, causing the deaths of over 1,000 of our soldiers and tens of thousands of Iraqis. Iraq, meanwhile, having been destabilized by us, is now heading further and further toward civil war. He's provided a windfall of profits for Halliburton, his Vice President's company, he reduced the number of programs for the poor, reversed laws about the environment so we now are legally polluting and destroying our national parks as we did fifty years ago, he's cut funding for education, cut taxes but only for the well heeled, he's passed a health plan for the elderly that allows pharmaceutical companies to charge whatever they wish without competition, and he has overseen the cutting back of some of our constitutional freedoms.



INVADING IRAQ

The book, "A World Transformed," was written by the first President Bush and his national-security adviser, Brent Scowcroft in 1998. This passage from the book describes why Bush the father left Saddam Hussein in power at the end of the Gulf War.

"To eliminate him would have incurred incalculable human and political costs. We would have been forced to occupy Bagdhad and, in effect, rule Iraq. The Coalition would instantly have collapsed, the Arabs deserting it in anger and other allies pulling out as well…Furthermore, we had been self-consciously trying to set a pattern for handling aggression in the post-Cold War world. Going in and occupying Iraq, thus unilaterally exceeding the United Nations' mandate, would have destroyed the precedent of international response to aggression we hoped to establish. Had we gone the invasion route, the United States could conceivably still be an occupying power in a bitterly hostile land. It would have been a dramatically different — and perhaps barren— outcome."

The President by his own testimony says he knows right from wrong and sees no reason to listen to anyone who disagrees with him. And when asked to name even one mistake he might have made during his four years as President, he changes the subject.

I cannot think of anything whatsoever that this President has done during his four years in office that was constructive and good. He can't seem to think of anything, either. And so I find it hard to believe that anyone could vote to allow this President to continue for four more years. If Bugs Bunny were running against Bush, I'd vote for him. Maybe I'm missing something. Vote for Bush if you want. This is what I think.

Under the circumstances, it is not hard to imagine a John Kerry having a better Presidency during the next four years. I will vote for John Kerry.

As far as other elections in our area, both State and Federal, this newspaper supports State Assemblyman Fred Thiele, Congressman Tim Bishop and Senator Chuck Schumer, and State Senator Ken La Valle. All of them, with the exception of Bishop, have run before and won, and all, including Bishop, are doing a vigorous and good job for us, and I see no reason to replace any of them.

I should take note of the candidacy of Bill Manger, a well-heeled, well-financed private citizen who is running a campaign to unseat Congressman Tim Bishop. I don't know much about Manger, but I do know that many of the claims he has made against Bishop in his campaign commercials are wildly inaccurate and inflammatory. Since that is how he has chosen to conduct himself, I do not feel he is qualified to be a Congressman and I will not vote for him.•

Who's Here

Peggy Kerry

Activist

By Dan Rattiner

As you may know, John Kerry's older sister, Peggy Kerry, lives in Springs, just a half a block from Three Mile Harbor. She also lives in downtown Manhattan, with her husband George Kaler and their three-year-old adopted daughter, Iris, traveling back and forth. Most days of the week they are in the city, but for the rest, they are out east.

"We bought the house five years ago," she told me. "It was a vacation house at first. I missed the ocean. I grew up at the ocean in New England and summer wouldn't be summer without it. Since we both work in the city, it made sense to come east. I love it here."

Peggy grew up as an "Army brat," in her words. She and her younger brothers and one younger sister were always on the move. Her father was an officer in the Army Air Corps.

"I was born in Dayton, Ohio where my dad served at the Wright Patterson Air Force Base. We lived in Dayton, then California, then Denver where John was born. Then dad got TB and he retired, and we moved to the small town of Millis, Massachusetts, where dad went back to lawyering. He had a practice in Boston."

"What would you call home, when you were growing up?" I asked.

"My aunt's house. She and my late uncle, Fred, Frederick Winthrop, had a big family mansion on the ocean in Ipswich, Massachusetts. Uncle Fred had grown up there. And so we'd all go there — we kids and my mom actually lived there for an extended length of time when my dad was stationed in Norway — and in addition to us four kids, there were seven other cousins who came all the time to my aunt's house. We all went there in the summertime, and at Thanksgiving and Christmastime. My first memories are from there. I remember we played all sorts of games. Every Thanksgiving our family played touch football on the lawn against the Lawrence family, who lived next door."

"Do they still do that today?"

"Oh yes, they do. Only now they play soccer."

Peggy Kerry is a small, slender woman in her early sixties, friendly and alert, with little of the grandness and drama that distinguishes her younger brother. But there is an intensity about her.

She was, in many ways, the leader of that generation of the Kerry clan...

She was, in many ways, the leader of that generation of the Kerry clan, and when she talks about her sister Diana, who lived in Indonesia and was on the last plane out of Iran in the 1970s, or when she talks about her youngest brother, now a Washington lawyer working with CAM, there seems to be some of herself in the conversation.

Her education would have been the envy of anybody. She went to boarding school in Switzerland from the eighth to the tenth grade, then the Shipley Boarding School in Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania in eleventh and twelfth grade, then on to Smith College where she graduated in 1963. Shortly after graduation, President Kennedy was assassinated.

"The Kennedy assassination was a call to action for me. There had been this sense of Camelot. The best and the brightest, working for the people. 'Ask not what the country can do for you, but what you can do for your country.'"

Peggy was, at the time of the assassination, teaching English as a second language to foreign students in Cambridge, England. She had been there just five months, but now she arranged to return to America. She would become a political activist. She got work in Boston, fundraising for CARE/USA. She then moved to New York City, where she got a job working for the Civil Liberties Union. She also freelanced for the Village Voice, writing articles mostly about the anti-war movement in Washington.

Younger brother John had graduated from Yale by that time, had joined the Navy and then had gone off to war in Vietnam. It was 1968, the height of both the war and the opposition to the war. He was on the U. S. S. Gridley, a troop ship, headed for Vietnam, when she moved to New York City.

"Were you worried about him?" I asked.

"We were all worried about him. Especially after we learned that his friend Richard Pershing had died in the conflict. They were very close. In any case, John completed his tour, very decorated as you know, and then came back to a new post at the Brooklyn Navy Yard."

At the time, Peggy was working for a more well known political activist, Adam Walinsky, who had arranged to make a series of anti-war speeches at college campuses around the region on a very tight schedule. Walinsky had been, along with Peter Edelman, the speechwriter for Bobby Kennedy. Then Bobby had been assassinated.

"I called up John at the Navy Yard and prevailed on him to fly Adam around upstate New York for the day." Doing so could not help but have a great political impact on the young returning Swift Boat captain.

"I didn't know John was a pilot," I said. "Did he learn it in the military?"

"No, at Yale. He and some of his friends took lessons, got their licenses and rented a plane."

Peggy remained in New York City and worked for the ACLU, the NYCLU and a lot of political campaigns. In 1972 when John went off on his first campaign for a seat in Congress, Peggy went to work for him. In 1974, she became a paralegal in the office of New York State District Attorney Bob Morganthau. John, meanwhile, left office for awhile and worked in

The Sheltered Islander

By Sally Flynn

Sheltered Islander #322
Technically Speaking...

This has been a big news week on the Island. Congrats to Wade Kotula, a local guy, for winning the 5K Race! I rant about the 5K Races, but only out of sheer jealousy, I'm impressed with anyone who can beat me across a parking lot, which is pretty much anyone.

The other big news in all the papers is Kenneth Payne, the island's first convicted murderer (hopefully only), was released on a technicality. Of course, there's absolutely nothing funny about anything related to that, but ignoring it is like pretending not to notice that there's an elephant in the living room.

I got to thinking.....wouldn't it be nice if we could all get off on a technicality once in awhile?

Listen Doc, technically, I'm only overweight on Earth. On the moon, I only weigh 85 lbs, so I'm not overweight, I'm just planetorially challenged....."

"Your Honor, technically, I was not "drunk in public." I was drunk in the bar. I only became "drunk in public" when the bar, which sells intoxicating beverages, threw me out into "public" for over consumption. Since the bar is technically the causative factor here, I think you should fine them and reward me for exposing this racket!"

"Yeah, but, technically speaking, I didn't actually sleep with your sister. We never slept..."

"Look Mom, when you gave me a midnight curfew, you didn't specify what time zone. Technically, I was only late by Eastern Standard Time, next time you should more specific. I can't read your mind y'know..."

"Look, I know you're just doing your job taking tickets for the ferry. But technically, you can only charge me for the bodies physically in the car. Whoever I've got tied on the roof rack has to be considered luggage."

"Let me explain this to you, lady. When I said we'd start work at 6 a.m., I didn't mean we'd actually be here at 6 a.m. Technically speaking, the working process starts when we get up at 6 a.m. Then we have to set up our tools, get breakfast, and just do a whole load of stuff in order to be here by 10 a.m."

"Technically honey, it's only babysitting when they are not your children and you are paid to take care of them. Since these are your children, even during the World Series, we call it 'child care'."

"Well, my cell phone is in your name, since I'm not 18 and can't get my own cell yet. So technically, this is your phone bill."

"Okay, since this is technically my cell phone and my bill, then I can keep it and delete all the numbers and add my own. Hurray! I never had a cell phone before!"

[Heard in court while I was waiting for my ex to fight a speeding ticket. This statement was met with peals of laughter.]

"Yes, but technically Your Honor, the only reason I hit the phone pole was because the phone company put it there. Otherwise, we wouldn't be here."

[From my son] "I know technically we're related (oh, just a little...), but what you think is love is only a neurochemical response to a hormone released in your brain during childbirth. Face it Mom, if you hadn't gone through childbirth, you wouldn't even know I existed." (Wait...I gotta write that down.....)

[This from an actual conversation I had at Circuit City] "Yes, we do warranty all our electronics for one year and you did purchase an extended warranty for three years on this phone. But you used it, maybe not with a surge protector. I mean, you can say you had it plugged into a surge protector, but how do we know? Technically speaking, YOU are responsible for any electricity flowing through your electronic devices."

I wonder if I could have been held responsible for my fist and his teeth occupying the same space at the same time? Technically, in quantum physics, there would be millions of possible locations for my fist at that moment in time....

Here's a strange thought. By this time next week, we'll have our next president.

Abraham Lincoln said, "The people will have as good a government as they are willing to work for and as bad a government as they are willing to stand for." Mark Twain said, "Being patriotic means supporting your country all the time and your government when it deserves it." But, technically speaking, it's still a government of the people, by the people and for the people — as long as we keep it that way. Everybody get out and vote!

blow up factories and bridges, realized that their mission was in jeopardy, and walked quickly to the Amagansett railroad station, where, still dressed completely believably as all-night fishermen, they bought tickets from the stationmaster on the 5:33 a.m. to Manhattan. They successfully boarded the train and disappeared.

But after lying low with Nazi sympathizers in Astoria, Queens for six days, afraid to move, Dasch decided to turn the others in to the FBI. He took a train to Washington, talked to some agents there, and the others were picked up. The Nazis were convicted by a military court, Dasch sentenced to life in prison, and the others to death. They were soon shot by a firing squad.

And so, by next spring, all ships and port facilities in Sag Harbor will have procedures in place regarding passengers, vehicles, baggage screening, restricted areas, safety personnel, ship identification and surveillance equipment. All large ships must show a safety officer, a safety plan, and a safety certificate from the country of origin. The port must have a safety officer and a staff trained to be aware of unusual boat movements.

In an odd coincidence, when harbormaster Swenson was asked what sort of behavior might be deemed suspicious, he said "a fishing boat seen in a location not usually used for fishing."

The Nazis came as "fishermen," and as this country learned later, were trained in a spy school in Bavaria to successfully look and act like fishermen.

They were even taught fly casting.

Going to rent a boat in Sag Harbor to take it out fishing? Make sure you know where you're supposed to be fishing. If you are clueless and go where people don't fish, you could be picked up. Because the presumption is a terrorist wouldn't know where the fish are.

On the other hand, the people patrolling the beaches looking for Nazis in 1942 were told to look for uniformed Nazi officers coming ashore and when it happened, the Nazis who landed WERE in uniform.

Go figure. •

the District Attorney's office in Massachusetts, got married and started a family, and then in 1982, ran and won the race for Lieutenant Governor on the ticket with Michael Dukakis. In 1984, he won his Senate seat, which he has held to this day.

In 1984, Peggy married George Kaler, a longtime Manhattan resident, who worked for Settlement House, and later, for CUNY Medical School where he is currently the Chief Financial Officer. Peggy currently works at the United Nations where she holds a post in the State Department at the U. S. Mission.

She and her husband have traveled extensively. She's been to Turkey, Indonesia, Israel, most of Europe, Maylasia, Mexico, the Caribbean. At the present time, she is working evenings and weekends, sometimes taking days off for long weekends, working and campaigning for her younger brother's run for President. One the Friday night after the second debate, she was among the first people John embraced, a moment caught on nationwide TV.

At the time of our interview, Peggy Kerry had just come from a fundraiser in Manhattan for the Eleanor Roosevelt Legacy, a non-profit organization that helps women who want to run for office at the state level. Among others there were Congressman Chuck Schumer and Senator Hillary Clinton.

Hopefully, all of this will calm down somewhat after November 2, and Peggy will be able to return to a more normal lifestyle. •

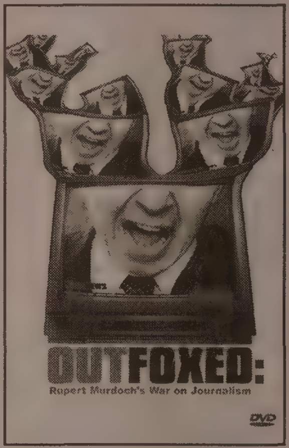
Big Event Of The Week

SOMETHING REALLY SCARY

Outfoxed, A Film About Rupert Murdoch's War On Journalism, At Floyd Memorial Library

Floyd Memorial Library will host a free showing of the documentary film "Outfoxed" on Friday, October 29, at 6 pm.



OUTFOXED:
Rupert Murdoch's War on Journalism
DVD

Outfoxed examines how media empires, led by Rupert Murdoch's Fox News, have been running a "race to the bottom" in television news. This film provides an in-depth look at Fox News and the dangers of ever-enlarging corporations taking control of the public's right to know.

The film explores Murdoch's burgeoning kingdom and the impact on society when a broad swath of media is controlled by one person.

This documentary also reveals the secrets of Former Fox news producers, reporters, bookers and writers who expose what it's like to work for Fox News. These former employees talk about how they were forced to push a "right-wing" point of view or risk their jobs. As one said, "There's no sense of integrity as far as having a line that can't be crossed."

Director/producer Robert Greenwald has produced and/or directed 53 television movies, miniseries and features. He is the director of Uncovered and the executive producer of the UN series: Unprecedented, Uncovered, and the soon to be released Unconstitutional.

What's In Store: Heavenly Coffee At Patti B's

Further Proof That The North Fork Just Doesn't Need Starbucks

By Jolie Trueman-Honey

The love of coffee is truly transcendent. Divisive politics? Forgotten. Red states and blue states? Who cares. We coffee lovers are soul mates, plain and simple.

My own love affair with the glorious bean began in an exquisite town nestled in the foothills of the Alps in central Austria. Bad Ischl was the summer playground of the Hapsburgs, and a more picturesque village is difficult to imagine. There, sitting outside Café Zauner, overlooking the lazy River Traun, I tasted my first cup of real coffee, which was actually more akin to what we call espresso, and was hooked for life. That (along with their renowned pastry) is what compelled my traveling companion and me, some two hours after our departure, to turn our little rented Peugot around and head right back. What the heck. We were twenty and on summer vacation, the scenery was spectacular, and we just had to experience that coffee again.

I've spent a lot of years since trying to duplicate that cup of coffee, and while they say you can never go home again, I've found my latest favorite coffee house: Patti B's on the corner of Love Lane and the Main Road in Mattituck.

Owner Patti Byer

Ironically, I had tasted Patti's magnificent espresso before I had ever heard of her store. One morning in July, I had dropped by the beautiful renovated farmhouse of a dear friend. Fully aware of my java addiction, Susan had earlier gone to Patti B's, had purchased cups of espresso, and, when I arrived, made us superb iced latte's. So, there we sat, on this gloriously sunny summer morning on her veranda, looking out over acres of vineyards and enjoying the best coffee I had had in thirty some-odd years.

Clearly, I needed to investigate. And what I found was not only great coffee, but a charming coffee house where one could easily wile away a lazy hour or two.

Formerly Rudy's, Patti B's has a whole new look. Awnings and shutters removed, the large picture windows draw light into the café and views of the quaint shops on Love Lane and the proud maple that guards the corner. The interior is newly decorated with authentic-patterned antique wallpaper highlighted by sprigs of red clover. Comfy moss sofas and maroon armchairs, and bistro tables with wicker chairs, provide plenty of seating. And gracing an end table is an amazing bunch of oversized hydrangeas straight from Patti's husband's farm. On warm days, the front porch provides a lovely setting to enjoy your coffee and The New York Times or Dan's Papers!

So, what's your pleasure? Available seven days a week from 7 a.m. (actually 6:40 if you're desperate), are five brewed coffees: Columbian, decaf, house special, hazelnut and French vanilla. Help yourself.

Additionally, you may sample espresso, cappuccino, lattes (espresso or chai), iced coffee, blended drinks, Stash teas and the best homemade hot chocolate you're likely to find.

Patricia Byer is the name of this "soul mate" who is the creative power behind Patti B's. The shop is the realization of a dream that's been "brewing" for a long time: the desire to own her own business. Perhaps it's not surprising that Patti ended up on the North Fork. She was raised in Phoenicia, a small town in upstate New York. But after high school, she couldn't resist the pull of the city, where she earned her degree in studio art, and began working in the fashion and beauty industry. She lived and worked in Manhattan for thirty years, much of the time as the director of special events for Estee Lauder.

But five years ago, her husband, Keith Pierpont, originally from Hampton Bays, bought a farm in Baiting Hollow, now called Pierpont's Blossom Farm, which grows rare and beautiful varieties of flowers, particularly hydrangea, lilac, and spirea, for sale to wholesalers, and that changed the course of Patti's life. She absolutely fell in love with the North Fork. Commuting became a chore. And the only decision to be made was what she would do with her new life on the East End.

The answer came in an advertisement in Dan's Papers. And when she saw the circa 1850s Octagon building, she knew that she had found just what she was looking for. So the research began. "I didn't Attention Seniors!

AARP Offers New Website That Can Save Money, And Lives

Almost half of New York's older population is unaware that they are eligible for many of the 70 public benefits that can provide them with such vital services as heating assistance, paid Medicare premiums, and prescription drug coverage. AARP now offers an internet tool, www.benefitscheckup.org, that can screen individuals age 55+ for crucial benefits and services to enhance their quality of their life.

In just 15 minutes you can find out if you are eligible for such services as the Home Energy Assistance Program (HEAP), which provides grants for utility bills; the Medicare Savings Program, which helps pay for Medicare premiums; and programs that can reduce the cost of prescription drugs, such as EPIC, the state's prescription plan that can save the elderly 80 percent off the cost of medications.

The tool is free, fast and confidential. And since the database contains benefits available in each state, a son living in New York can screen his grandmother in Florida.

In New York State, over 32 percent of households headed by a person 65+ have incomes of less than $15,000 a year. According to the U.S. Energy Dept., consumers will pay 28 percent more for heating oil and 15 percent more for natural gas this winter. Factor in increased Medicare premiums and costly prescription drugs and it's clear that older New Yorkers on fixed incomes face pressing choices about the food they eat, the temperature of their homes, and the medications they take.

want to learn to make good coffee. I wanted to learn to make the best coffee. It really is a science," Patti tells me as we sit and chat in a sunny corner of the store.

The results? She uses different roasters for different coffees, getting the absolute best beans from a variety of vendors. "You continually have to taste, and smell and check," she says. She also insists that all employees make every beverage to her strictest standards.

And, as everyone knows, the great taste of coffee is enhanced by delicious pastry. Try her biscotti; the English toffee and the chocolate hazelnut are scrumptious. Homemade cookies are available, too, as well as scones from the famous Aldo's of Greenport. A variety of muffins, and fresh bagels and rolls await you every morning. ("If I don't sell them that day, I won't use them," Patti tells me.)

Patti B's also has an enticing lunch menu that includes made-to-order wraps (ham, turkey, roast beef, chicken and tuna salad, mozzarella and tomato), and homemade soups and pannini, which will be served as the weather turns colder.

But there's something intangible about Patti B's. Perhaps it's the heavenly smell of fine fresh-roasted coffee. Perhaps it's the enthusiasm of a city person who feels that she's found her own personal paradise. Whatever it is, venture into her store and you will be treated not only to a memorable cup of coffee, but to Patti's sincere warmth and winning smile. "The best part of the business is my customers," she says. And what's more, she means it.

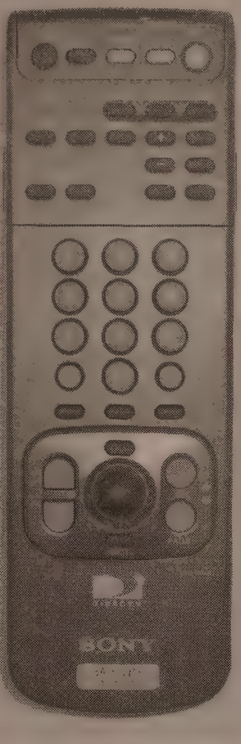
Away At School. . . By David Lion Rattiner

TV Obsessed



I have an older sister, Maya, who lives in San Francisco with her two children. It is weird for me to say that Maya has two children when I feel like just a blink ago, I was her younger brother driving her crazy. Maya is one of those people who simply refuses to enjoy the things that make life entertaining when you are lazy – primarily television. When I was a young cartoon watching maniac, my sister Maya did almost everything in her power to prevent me from enjoying the wonderfully animated boob tube.

It would be a nice summer day and I would be watching a great episode of "Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles" when my sister would barge into the room and shut the television off. I always thought that this was such an amazingly bold move on her part. At ten years old, I was almost as tall as she was. I could take her in a fight. "Get your little butt outside and play. You can't waste away a day like this! Go outside and play with the dog or something."

My younger brother Gabriel and I would look at one another, angry at her actions, but obedient. We would march outside and figure something out. The dog would not follow us. He just saw our leaving as an opportunity to stretch out on the couch and change the channel. My brother and I would climb a tree, play one-on-one basketball, wrestle, throw rocks at each other, pretty much anything. I always thought it was weird that Maya would rather see me throw rocks at my little brother Gabriel than have us watch cartoons. But like I said, she lives out in San Francisco.

Now, Gabe and I are currently in our twenties and living together, and Maya is in her thirties and living with her husband and family, and very little has changed. Gabe and I still watch television together and Maya is still a vegetarian. I am in my last year at college in Boston and I've got to say that Gabe and I are catching up on the TV that Maya robbed us of when we were children.

I think the presidential debates sparked our laziness. Gabe and I sat glued in front of the TV. We were afraid to take our eyes off of the TV. We sat there for nearly five hours straight, hoping to see something amazing. We watched the debates all the way through, then watched political commentators comment on the debates and replay bits and pieces. Then of course, after two weeks of this, the playoffs began.

The Yankees and the Red Sox faced off in the most amazing comeback in baseball history. Every pitch was an adrenaline rush to watch. Gabe and I were glued once again. If we got hungry we ordered in, if we got tired we fell asleep on the couch. We never went outside to play, we never walked a dog because we don't have one, we just watched. For a week again we were glued. It was Red Sox mayhem. Like a virus, they kept creeping back into the series, and honestly, where the hell did Johnny Damon come from in game 7? Can you believe this guy?

Neither one of us has shaved since the debates. Neither one of us has brushed our teeth. We just sit there numb, like zombies, waiting for the next pitch. I don't even acknowledge my girlfriend when she walks in. I just sit there, mesmerized by the amazing television and all of its glowing beauty because now we have the World Series and it is so ridiculously amazing to me.

I realize that I have a problem and am considering calling my sister, but what can she really do? She is all the way out in San Francisco. She isn't here to shut off the television and stand in front of it. I keep thinking that my girlfriend will do something, like threaten to leave me or something, but she doesn't do anything. It is like she is happy she doesn't have to deal with me. Is this a bad sign? I don't know and I don't really have time to think about it because Tom Hanks is being interviewed about how he feels about the Red Sox right now and I need to watch. That's it, I'm calling my sister.

When In Manhattan...BY OLIVER PETERSON

A Sweet and Scary Halloween in the City

Halloween is creeping around the corner, and what could be scarier than the scrape of fallen leaves blowing along Hamptons country roads on a dark and cold October night? Streets packed with crazed revelers donning glittery costumes in Manhattan's West Village. The 31st Annual New York's Village Halloween Parade marches its madness this Sunday, the 31st, along 6th Avenue from Spring Street to 22nd.

The parade, which was named by Festivals International as "The Best Event in the World on October 31st," didn't begin with the crowds estimated at 2 million. A puppeteer and mask-maker named Ralph Lee started the tradition small. For an intimate group of family and friends, he created a house-to-house walk in his Greenwich Village neighborhood. The parade blossomed by its third year, and Lee agreed to hand it over to the Theater for the New City, who expanded the route and participation. In many ways it began as a gay event with heavy emphasis on drag and Halloween glamour. Today those themes continue, but the sheer size of the event brings every type of person imaginable, and even better, costumes you couldn't imagine.

Each year, actual marchers reach the 50,000 mark and the parade has become most famous for the giant puppets. Hundreds of volunteers assist in the creation and operation of these massive and awesome fully-animated papier-mache creatures. A theme is decided for this Carnivale in our favorite city every year. Last year's "Trickster" theme will be followed this year by all things "Sweet." Though interpretations like candy will be present for sure, the goal is more in line with kindness and peace. Expect Buddhas and big men dressed as little girls with lollipops. The planners explain it as sweet in the philosophical sense. They ask for joy, bliss, and ease of body, mind, and spirit. Open your heart, dance in your costume, and enjoy the wonders of life. Don't just survive, but thrive!

Everyone in the parade is automatically entered into a costume contest judged by "Undercover Agents." For the best chance of being seen, get yourself to the pre-parade line-up in front of the HERE Arts Center on 6th Avenue at Spring Street from 6:30 to 8 p.m. The walk begins at 7 p.m. First prize in the contest is two tickets on JetBlue to any of their destinations, as well as two tickets to Wicked, Dracula, Symphonie Fantastique and Avenue Q. If you don't feel like marching, but would rather observe with a brown paper bag with nondescript beverage, plan to get there a few hours before start time. You'll get a better view, and there are plenty of bars, restaurants and shops to fill the time. You'll only be able to cross 6th Avenue at Houston and 14th Streets, but if you're in a pinch you can always pass through the underground subway stations for a nominal two bucks. It's not a lot to pay for one of the most memorable nights of Manhattan's year.

New York Magazine cites several great places for eats and good cocktails. Da Silvano will have a pumpkin and barley soup served in a hollowed pumpkin, and just a couple of blocks north, La Palapa Rockola celebrates the Day of the Dead with appropriate traditional Mexican fare. Bar Six serves Halloween drink specials including the Witch's Pity and the Devil's Kiss. I tend to stick with the brown paper bag, but it's not for everyone. Cops are usually pretty cool during the festivities if you remain reasonable. After all, with the Sweet theme you should be as well behaved as possible and have one of the best nights of your life.

Other silly contests include "The Cakewalk," where entrants will show judges their silliest walk before the parade and one lucky winner will march while performing their antics for a television audience and the thousands of appreciative spectators. If your birthday is on Halloween, you can also join the Cakewalk and the televised coverage while the good people of New York sing "Happy Birthday" to you.

I can't say enough good things about this parade. I promise it will beat anything out here, and it's worth being a little tired at work on Monday. To get more information, call (212) 475-3333 extension 14044, or visit their painfully slow website at www.halloween-nyc.com.

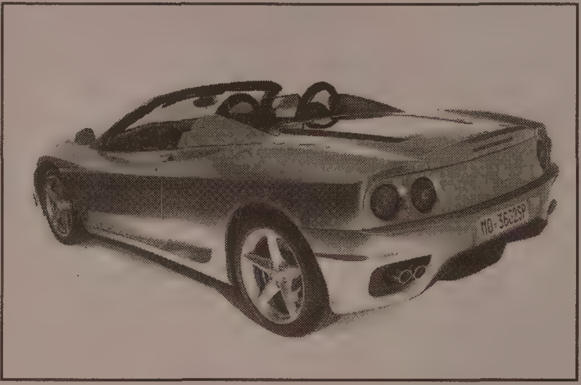
CLASSIC CARS WITH BOB GELBER

In this column you have read about virtually every part of a car, from automobile grills to exhaust pipes and wheels. So what's left, you ask? Taillights. What really interests me in this automotive design nuance is the fact that in some of the newer cars, taillight design has taken on a life of its own. It seems that every few decades someone in the design departments of various manufacturers seems to say, "Let's do something different with those taillights."

If we go back to the late forties and fifties to coincide with the invention of the first jet planes, a car's taillights started taking the shape of jet exhausts. Starting in '55 with the original Thunderbird, all of Ford motorcars carried a jet plane exhaust design theme. Probably the most outrageous jet exhaust theme in taillights were the lights mounted on top of the tailfins of the '59 Cadillac. In this case, two delicate taillights protruded like flames from aircraft-like pods. Speaking of airplanes, to change the subject just slightly, do you remember the grill, or rather, nose of the '49 Studebaker? That car actually had an aircraft spinner and propeller.

On the early sports cars, the taillights were usually just afterthoughts. British cars of different makes sometimes used the same taillights, acquired from a single taillight manufacturer. Porsche originally used the same taillights used by Volkswagen, which were little beehive shaped lenses. Another interesting fact is that originally early cars had six-volt electrical systems. When combined with the small delicate taillights of the era, they were very hard to see at night. Most of the lazer-like taillights on today's modern cars are virtually ten times as bright as those on the cars of the forties and fifties.

Until the advent of electric turn signals, which really became popular in the fifties, a lot of vehicles did not even have two taillights. Most trucks, because symmetry of design in the rear was not very important, had only one small taillight. Forget backup lights. They were not invented yet. Even emergency flashers were not fitted on cars until Chrysler used them in 1959.



Taillight design has always taken a back seat to other aspects of a car's look. The only car I can think of that has a classic design theme in its taillights is Ferrari. They have used the same simple large round taillight for the last fifty years. The design house of Pinin Farina had it right the first time around.

Taillights have definitely grown larger over the years. Nowadays it is common to see the entire rear of the car covered in plastic. Some cars are even designed with sequential taillights that look animated. Amusing overkill. Then we have the "Let's put the taillights anywhere" theory. When the first Volvo station wagons appeared with the taillights running down from the roof line to the back of the rear fenders, it was certainly a design statement. Maybe not so attractive, but certainly visible. The Ford Focus has copied the same taillight treatment.

The most creative use of taillights is the relatively new "third" tail dictated by the Feds several years ago. Of course the Europeans laugh at us Yanks with our Cyclops third light. Are these lights superfluous? They are at eye level and now are everywhere, on trunk lids, spoilers and inside rear tinted windows where they can hardly be seen. The late model Mercedes 450 SL sportscars (I use the term loosely) had factory mandated third taillights mounted on their trunk lids. What did every owner of an older model 450 SL do? He bought a trunk lid taillight to instantly upgrade his car.

Today the trend is to truly creative taillights. Originally started by the fast and furious Kamakazi Honda racers, the clear lens taillight seems to be going mainstream. Why, even conservative Range Rover is using them on their flagship. Look carefully at the new Mercedes 5009, it has a half-clear lens taillight.

There seems to be a small design cycle going on in cars today. When they start paying attention to the lowly and often misunderstood taillight, maybe we are in for an auto design revolution. I certainly hope so.

Shop 'til You Drop... With Maria Tennariello

Fall is officially here! The Hampton Film Festival is over and Halloween is right around the corner. Everyone has started shopping for costumes and holiday gifts. The stores are buzzing and the sales are plentiful. Let's do some shopping.

On Main Street in Hampton Bays, Val's Closet is having a sale on her fabulous designer dresses and the prices are very affordable. Stop in and see for yourself, the store is all ready for the holiday dress-up season including accessories.

I just found out that Main Street Sweets at 121 Main Street in Westhampton Beach has started its famous annual "Candy Super Sale" on Friday, October 22. If you love chocolates, check out the two pounds for $10 deal and the everyday candy, five pounds for $10. Get going, the holidays are right around the corner and don't forget the kiddies on Halloween.

Have you been to Aunt Suzie's Clothes For Kids on Hampton Road in Southampton yet? The shop has plenty of fun costumes for your little ones in sizes three months to twenty-four months, pumpkins, dogs, horses and so much more. In addition check out the $10 rack with some great outfits by Hartstrings, Kitestrings just to name a few. Aunt Suzie's is also a great source for kid's newborns to sizes sixteen. Get there early for the best selections.

What's brewing at Hampton Coffee Company on Montauk Highway in Water Mill this season? How about free samples of pumpkin pie coffee every day throughout the month of October? Perfect for fall, Hampton Coffee boasts that this flavored coffee tastes just like the hot-from-the-oven autumn dessert, complete with a touch of spicy nutmeg. The pumpkin pie coffee beans are also available by the pound in both the Water Mill and the Main Street, East Hampton stores. A great gift idea for Thanksgiving Day invites.

Cittidinni's, Southampton

Ann Kolb is retiring and closing the Ann Kolb Gallery on 46 Main Street in East Hampton after this holiday season. There is now a gallery wide "Retirement" sale that has just begun with many fine craft, giftware and jewelry ready to go for the holiday gift-giving season. The fall hours are Thursday through Monday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. For more information you can contact the Ann Kolb Gallery at 631-324-3443 by e-mail at: annkolbg@aol.com.

If you were wondering when Nancy & Co. was having their sale, the word is out. It's a "cash only" sale at the Southampton and East Hampton stores and you will find huge savings on sweat suits, sweaters and pants, with prices ranging from $10 to $100. This sale is in addition to Nancy's regular fall merchandise sale, which includes super luxurious cashmere sweaters, leather handbags and stunning shearling coats at a cool 30% to 50% off. What a deal and a half.

Don't forget to stop and shop at the "Crazy Sale" every Friday through Sunday in October for great deals on shoes, boots and bags. The store. Sigersonmorrison, is located at 11 Madison Street in Sag Harbor. Get going for the best of the best choices.

The best part of this shopping trip is picking up my grandson Anthony after school to pick out his Halloween costume at the Whalebone General Store on Noyac Road in Sag Harbor. I took him to find something scary for his Halloween party and found a "Halloween Blow-Out" sale. You will find 50% off on children's costumes, right up my alley. This store has a very exclusive and large selection of make-up, props, wigs, masks (that are imported from Italy), helium balloons, ghosts, pumpkins, bats, signs in black lights, orange lights, light up spiders and plenty of adult costumes in all sizes. There is also a huge selection of greeting cards, T-shirts, giftware, and so much more.

If you are having a sale, know of one or have any shopping questions, please contact me at Dan's Papers via fax: 631-537-3330 or via email at: shoptil@danspapers.com I would love to hear from you.

JUST FOR KIDS

Great Halloween Costume Ideas

It seems that Halloween grows in popularity year after year. An estimated 25 million families will participate in trick-or-treating and the festivities that surround Halloween this year. It doesn't matter how old you are; on this unique day, everyone has permission to act like a kid again. Children look forward to creating their special costumes and adults love to dress up for parties.

What will be the hit at this year's Halloween Parade in New York City (West Village)? Some of the most extravagant costumes grace the streets of not only downtown NYC, but local gatherings and parades as well. Halloween costumes can be broken down into categories. From the ghoulish blood and guts to the fairy tale princess, the possibilities are endless.

What's hot for 2004 you ask? Hmmm... For kids, we have Spiderman, Power Ranger, Frankenstein, Batman, SpongeBob and Harry Potter for the young lads. As for the young ladies, Daphne from Scooby Doo, Snow White, Cleopatra and Tinker Bell, just to name a few.

When it comes to adult costumes, we can get a bit more daring. I think Halle Berry has inspired many to dress up as Catwoman, and Paris Hilton, well why not dress up like Paris Hilton, Maid Marion, Dorothy from the Wizard of Oz, a Cheerleader or a Sexy Trekki, Firefighter or School Girl? All very popular this year. And I'm certain we'll see a few versions of Martha Stewart around as well. A few great websites inlcude: www.buycostumes.com, www.bizrate.com, wwwhalloweencostumes4u.com or www.anytimecostumes.com.

Many costumes can be made at home. You can use fabrics or costumes that have been recycled. Thrift stores are a great place to start. K-mart and the Disney store are also a great resources. My mom made all of my costumes when I was a child. Many of the craft stores offer patterns that can be used as a tracing guideline. Once your pattern is cut out, you can easily sew it together and add accessories. Cardboard boxes are great tools to use. Make a pair of dice by using two square boxes:

- Paint the boxes white
- Then paint black dots to replicate an authentic look
- Wear a pair of black tights and shoes/sneakers
- Paint your face half-white and black.

This is just one example of an inexpensive and quick way to put a costume together. Boxes can be used to replicate many great ideas such as a box of cereal, a candy bar, cell phone, a camera and much more. It allows you to be creative and have fun in the process. This year Halloween happens to be a Sunday. That means more candy and more trick-or-treaters. It will be an "All-Day" event. Safety is a main concern on Halloween. Here are a few safety tips and precautions recommended by IIABA (Independent Insurance Agents & Brokers of America):

Deter property vandalism by keeping outdoor lights on. Remove lawn furniture, or any other obstacles from the area to avoid accidents or damage.

Ensure that your home's entry is in good condition, free of loose or broken pieces on stairwells and walkways to avoid trick-or-treaters' injuries on your property.

Prevent fires by making sure pumpkins and other decorative items containing candles are placed at a distance where a child's costume cannot be ignited. Extinguish all candles before going to bed, and use battery operated lights wherever possible.

Be careful with costumes! All disguises should be made from flame-resistant material and shouldn't be too long or contain sharp accessories. Try to avoid masks that may obscure vision; use hypoallergenic makeup instead. Apply light-reflecting material to costumes as well.

Drive sober and slowly, watching for children who may be running or wearing dark costumes in the road. When walking, travel in groups and cross only at corners – never between parked cars.

Keep pets inside. Warn your children to stay away from animals as they visit door-to-door.

Inspects children's treats. Never eat unwrapped items, collect candy only from those you know and ask the local police department if it offers a candy x-ray service.

Halloween is one of the greatest and most fun holidays of the year. You only have a few days to decide on your costume, so get started. Trick-or-treat!

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood In The Hamptons

Being Julia and Shall We Dance?

"It is written in the stars." This was the credo of the movie moguls so, prophetically, they built a stairway to the stars of gleaming black Plexiglas that reflected and aggrandized the satiny glamour of its sleek performers – raising their appeal to sacred adoration approaching godliness. We all know that time has not dulled the luster of that belief, all that much. Fred and Ginger still shine bright in their domain and moviemakers continue to bask in their glow. Their 1937 Shall We Dance title frames another twinkle-toed, star-twinkling turn at dance as a stand-in for prone sex. The unfortunate aspect of the current Shall We Dance? is that its twinkling stars come off as being over-stuffed with the creamy sweetness of those cupcakes-gone-berserk, Twinkies.

The brighter-than-bright stars Jennifer Lopez and Richard Gere seriously toy with each other's groins as she teaches him how to dance his way out of mid-life "quiet desperation" Thoreau's indictment as parroted in the film. Following on the hoofing heels of Chicago, Mr. Gere is another lawyer turned twirler. He's happily (?) married with kids, nicely mannered and still taken with his wife, Susan Sarandon, who has less to do in this movie than Mop n' Glo. One day he satisfies an unintended urge and takes evening classes in a Ballroom Dance Studio. He keeps this from the wife who assumes he is swinging with "another woman." In a sense he is but J. Lo is a dedicated teacher and determined to make a borough class competitive dancer out of him, so she keeps him upright. As she says, "Dancing is a vertical expression of a horizontal wish." Happily, there is one grand moment between the two – a steeply lit, too-brief, electric tingle of starlight when they do a torrid dance; otherwise, Ms. Lopez's sparkling gleam is hidden under a bushel of extra-musty stardust.

Conversely, in Being Julia, the long repressed Annette Bening sparkles like a brutish champagne, peppering your nose with a bubbly mix of theatrical emoting, melodrama and tear jerking that are hallmarks of her roles as a British stage actress in the 1930s. Her performance nearly makes Bette Davis' girdle-snapping prima donna in All About Eve seem like Helen Hayes doing Queen Victoria. Ms. Bening's career appeared stalled as Mrs. Warren Beatty, being cast in benign roles. Her age has only improved potency like the effervescent wine. She makes a rather stale story Theatre by W. Somerset Maugham, as fresh as a new pot of Oolong. Her aging diva swirls in London's West End Theatre circles, where her stage and real-life theatrics are one. Her cast members trim her appearance like lights on a marquee. Jeremy Irons is her producer, director and husband in their (as he puts it) "terribly modern marriage." Miriam Margolyes, Michael Gambon and Shaun Evans are buffeted and consumed in turn by the highly emotional actress. Ms. Bening makes the creaking boards of "theatre" bounce with joie de vivre. Bravo and whoopee!

MAYOR ED KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

Vera Drake (+)

This understated English film, set in the 1950s, provides a first-rate viewing experience.

Vera (Imelda Staunton) works as a housekeeper for a number of families ranging from those of moderate circumstances to one upper-middle-class family. She works hard tidying up their homes and preparing their afternoon teas, but most important, her warm smiles and comforting manner bring a sense of happiness into their homes.

We soon learn that Vera is an abortionist, when abortion was a criminal act in England, even if performed by a physician. She uses the crudest instruments to perform the procedure, ranging from a household syringe and a cheese grater, which become exhibits in a criminal court proceeding, when she is arrested and tried for an abortion gone wrong.

The plot evolves in a very slow manner, but each step of the way it is filled with superb acting. Some of the characters in the film who give virtuoso performances are Vera's husband, Stan (Phil Davis), who, in his quiet manner, supports her when she is arrested; Vera's insufferable son Sid (Daniel Mays); Susan (Sally Hawkins) an upper-middle-class date-raped girl; Lily (Ruth Sheen) who, for a fee, recommends young girls to Vera who performs the abortions free of charge; and Detective Inspector Webster (Peter Wight), the compassionate detective unraveling the facts leading to Vera's indictment.

The movie illustrates the unfairness of how the wealthy in Britain could get permission for an abortion, if a psychiatrist testified that the woman was suicidal. The same exception existed in New York before the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision.

Back-room abortions also occurred in the United States before the 1973 Supreme Court decision in Roe vs. Wade. My mother, may she rest in peace, told her children of how she had had such abortions and how she feared for her life. This movie, in a non-melodramatic, understated manner, brings home how far we have come in common decency by legalizing abortion and providing women with a basic right which had been denied them for so long. The moving story, acting and beautiful cinematography add up to a fine film.

Stage Beauty (+)

Compared with Shakespeare in Love this film is disappointing; nevertheless, it is entertaining.

During the reign of King Charles II, women were not allowed to perform on stage. Ned Kynaston (Billy Crudup) is a leading stage actor who plays only female roles, and he certainly does a superb job of conveying a woman by gesture and voice. Maria (Claire Danes) wants to act on stage, and she is able to secure the king's permission (Rupert Everett) to play the female roles. Indeed, the king bans males from performing female roles. How Ned and Maria ultimately perform together in Othello in their proper sexual roles makes up the balance of the story.

When limited to performing only male roles, Ned finds that he cannot portray them properly. Indeed, when he tries to engage in an act of love with Maria, he also performs inadequately. His male lover appears early on in the film, but that relationship changes and everything comes out squeaky clean.

Billy Crudup gives a fine performance, but Claire Danes's leaves much to be desired, both in her role as Maria and when she portrays Desdemona on stage. While this is not a first-rate film, it is a cut above the ordinary so often served to us.

THE DAN'S PAPERS THEY MADE THE MOVIE HERE FILM FESTIVAL

THE DEVIL'S OWN

Other festivals fold up their big, flapping tents and go. Dan's Papers' festival of movies that take place here or were produced here carries on – giving us added pride of our local products. Films grown here are as important as our potatoes. This is our 9th year and, like the potatoes, eyes are still upon us.

Saturday, October 30th at 2 p.m. we present THE DEVIL'S OWN, Alan J. Pakula's 1997 intense drama of a young Irish terrorist which now takes on personal meaning in our nation. This is not a movie to be simply thrilled by; it is awesome in its omnipresence. Discussion is sure to be heavy following the show. Refreshments will lighten up the pressure created by the film. It will be shown at the Ross School Lecture Hall at Goodfriend Drive off Route 114. The Hall is down the hill on the left. The presentation is hosted by me, Guy-Jean de Fraumeni and Sarah Halsey. It is located at the Ross School.

Trodding on the long, blood-muddied path of treacherous attacks, strewn over the years and the world leading to our own national vulnerability, the film, The Devil's Own, follows the violent trail of one destructive individual, killing in the name of patriotism. Blood runs from a fishing village in turbulent North Ireland to the placid waters and town of Greenport, Long Island. Opening scenes (it's 1972) show a small boy fishing with his father in waters not far from Belfast. Later, they are at home at the family dinner table. Abruptly, masked men break in and kill the father. He's accused of being a Republican sympathizer. Abruptly, again, it's 1992, and British Intelligence make that now-grown boy their top priority for capture or death. He has grown to be a top killing machine and brilliantly clever. This is Brad Pitt. If you had notions of Pitt as simply a pretty boy with no acting abilities, his performance here will give you a jolt . . . as will the easy violence of the character he portrays. You get a dose of it when a large scale trap is set for him. Angered by this, his group decides that much more is needed . . . something that will really shake them up. Pitt is sent to the United States to purchase missiles . . . Stingers from Afghanistan. Here's where the film takes on an interesting premise.

Pitt is put up in the Brooklyn home of a totally unsuspecting police sergeant, Harrison Ford, and his lovely wife and 3 daughters. We now are given Ford's violent work on N.Y. streets, cross-cutting with Pitts. Ultimately, the two come together in a clash of conscience – a duel of morality and mortality as Pitt attempts to sail the missiles home. The intensity of the plot machinations is matched by the performances of Ford and Pitt. If you are a nail biter, kiss them goodbye. We may have gloves for a few of you so arrive early. Again the start time of the film is 2 p.m.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/writer/director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmys and various film festivals.

Entertainment In The Hamptons

review: dirty tricks...by jan silver

The phrase "dirty tricks" is associated in recent American history with the Nixon administration. In 1972, five "burglars" were arrested for breaking in and trying to bug the Democratic Party headquarters in the Watergate complex in Washington, D.C. Turns out the burglars were from C.R.E.E.P., the Committee to Re-elect the President (Nixon), and their mission was sanctioned by the White House. Exposing these and other doings eventually forced President Nixon to resign. (Both political parties today appear to use dirty tricks as a legitimate part of campaign strategy.)

Nixon's downfall started when Daniel Ellsberg gave Pentagon files on what was really happening in Vietnam to The Washington Post and The New York Times. Then Washington Post investigative reporters Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward wrote stories about the DNC break-in and who was behind it (later published in their best-selling book All the President's Men). Adding fuel to the fire of this national scandal is Martha Mitchell, wife of John Mitchell, Nixon's attorney general and then chairman of C.R.E.E.P. Martha Mitchell is the garrulous southern belle who the press labeled "the Mouth of the South."

Actress Judith Ivey brings Martha back to life in all her outspoken, outrageous glory. Born in Pine Bluff, Arkansas in 1918 to a financially comfortable family, Martha wrote in her high school yearbook "I love to wind my tongue up and I love to let it go."

Does she ever – and it makes her a national figure when husband John Mitchell becomes Nixon's Attorney General.

Playwright John Jeter has written a well-constructed, one-person memory play, starting in 1974 with Martha living alone in her Manhattan apartment after John Mitchell divorced her, and flashing back to the dramatic events in her life. Judith Ivey is a southerner, and she brilliantly captures Martha's charm, patriotic conservatism, and gift of gab.

Martha liked being in the center of things in Washington and was disappointed when her husband resigned from the Cabinet to head the President's re-election campaign. She convinced him she would be a good campaigner – "I was a member of the Chi Omega sorority at the University of Arkansas.... I mean I was the original 'Cute shoes, love your hair, tell your momma hi' girl" – and joins C.R.E.E.P.

Judith Ivey in Dirty Tricks

She's in California working for C.R.E.E.P. when the Watergate break-in occurs. She hears on television that C.R.E.E.P.'s chief of security, James McCord, is arrested in the break-in and John Mitchell, who's flown back to Washington, claims not to know him. She's incensed, tries to reach her husband, and then calls her friend, reporter Helen Thomas, at UPI. The next moment, men break into her hotel room, rough her up and drug her.

The incident is reported nationally and Martha is portrayed by C.R.E.E.P. as unstable and making up the story. (It is later found to be true.) Director Margaret Whitton uses set designer Neil Patel's once-elegant walls as a screen for Sage Marie Carter's selected video clips of the news reports, such as Walter Cronkite's. Fitz Patton's sound switches smoothly from Martha in the bedroom to Martha at stage-right for impromptu television interviews.

Costume designer Joseph G. Aulisi creates a versatile slip/peignoir/dress with frilly and tailored add-ons to take Martha from neophyte Cabinet wife in Washington to hounded political mouthpiece in Manhattan. Judith Ivey's hair is even perfectly done in Martha's blonde, upswept, lacquered style.

Martha is the victim of her own peccadilloes – she liked to drink and she did call newspapers in the middle of the night to sound off about things – but she also acted courageously and patriotically when she discovered C.R.E.E.P. was involved in a whole series of dirty tricks. Richard Nixon told television interviewer David Frost in 1977, "If it hadn't been for Martha, there'd have been no Watergate, because John [Mitchell] wasn't mindin' that store..."

Dirty Tricks runs for 90 minutes without intermission at the Public Theater, 425 Lafayette Street (in the East Village) through November 7. Performances are Tuesday through Saturday evening at 8 p.m., matinees Saturday and Sunday at 2 p.m. Tickets ($50) are available at the box office, from Telecharge (212-239-6200, 800-432-7250) or online at www.publictheater.org. There are discounted "rush tickets" available half an hour before curtain time, and all seats have good views of the thrust stage.

It is hard to believe the Public Theater, founded by Joseph Papp as the Shakespeare Workshop, is almost 50 years old. It admirably continues Papp's dedication to innovative theater, embracing all the complexities of our society.

THE HAMPTONS
INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL

A Conversation With...Gena Rowlands And Anthony LaPaglia

One of the most popular programs at the Film Festival is the surprise celebrity interview called "A Conversation with...". Some years, the stars cancel because of last-minute schedule changes, so this year HIFF invited the two prominent actors mentoring rising stars to be publicly interviewed. Gena Rowlands and Anthony LaPaglia spoke separately onstage with film critic Elvis Mitchell at Guild Hall on Saturday afternoon.

Gena Rowlands, born in 1930 in Madison, Wisconsin, is still a striking blond and a busy film actress. She won Oscars for her roles in Gloria and A Woman Under the Influence, two movies written and directed by her late husband John Cassavetes. He is considered the father of independent filmmaking, a legendary, living-on-the-edge actor/writer/director who pioneered cinema verite film techniques now standard in the industry such as hand-held cameras and body mikes. Cassavetes liked to work with a small group of actors including Rowlands, Peter Falk and Ben Gazzara. The Cassavetes had four children – Nick, Alexandra (Xan), Zoe, Frank – all of whom work in the film industry (Nick and Xan are directors). John Cassavetes died in 1989 of cirrhosis.

Gena Rowlands is a legend on her own, and she received a standing ovation from the audience (and a HIFF award for career achievement in acting) when she came onstage. She began as a stage actress, and when well-known Broadway director Josh Logan cast her opposite Edward G. Robinson in Middle of the Night, she became a star.

Talking about her husband's way of working, she said: "John didn't want actors discussing their characters with each other. He just had the cast read the script several times, and then gave very little direction during shooting. He wanted things to happen [between actors] while shooting, so he used flat lighting and body mikes."

She noted the very different roles she played in Cassavetes' films: "Gloria is a fantasy, a romp – a woman who takes on the New York Mafia and wins.... A Woman Under the Influence [an unstable young wife and mother who is committed to a mental hospital] started out as a play, but I told John it would be too physically and emotionally draining to do that part eight times a week, so he re-wrote it as a movie...".

Anthony LaPaglia

Speaking about acting and what experiences she draws on for her characters, she commented that people have many possibilities within, and "I really believe that inside, we [men and women] are alike." She feels John Cassavetes was "very intuitive and sympathetic towards women" as well as men, and she is concerned about the harshness and violence in film today because "movies affect our view of life."

Mitchell asked if Nick Cassavetes uses a lot of his father's film techniques. She replied, "Like John, he is deeply involved on the set...but, unlike his father, he likes to talk about the characters in the film."

The Cassavetes children grew up with their house often being used as a set. When Mitchell invited Xan Cassavetes to join her mother and asked what it was like growing up with filmmaking in her home, she didn't think it unusual until her father died. "I always felt my parents were cooler and more fun and more in love than other parents."

The Festival's other awardee for Career Achievement in Acting, Anthony LaPaglia, is an attractive, dark-haired, slightly stocky man in his mid-40s. He grew up in Adelaide, Australia, in a multi-cultural environment which gave him a good ear for language and accents. He and his family have been living in the U.S. for about 20 years.

He lost roles when casting directors learned he came from Australia, "so I would tell them I'm from Brooklyn, and then I would get the part." (He speaks with a non-regional American accent.)

LaPaglia is best known for his lead F.B.I. investigator role in the hit CBS television series Without A Trace, for the frequently recurring character Simon on television's Frasier, and for his Tony Award-winning performance in the outstanding 1998 Broadway revival of Arthur Miller's dramatic A View from the Bridge. Commenting on working with Arthur Miller, LaPaglia said: "It was so amazing...to get his guidance on my character. He said, 'Do not think about the words – just say them.' Sometimes an actor doesn't understand a character until opening night – or a few months after."

Some of his favorite movie roles are in Lantana and I Married an Ax Murderer, and he enjoyed working on Frasier. "As an actor, you get to mess around in lots of ways.... You get to take yourself places you don't ordinarily go.... The worse thing you can do as an actor is to pass judgment on the character [you are portraying]."

LaPaglia won two of television's Emmy Awards for his acting, and this year's Golden Globe award for best actor in a television series, but the pinnacle of acting for him is theater. "All acting experiences pale besides doing live theater."

Film Festival Fare: Documentary Panels

Once the stepchild of the high-powered "Hollywood film," some well-marketed documentaries are now considered legitimate commercial endeavors, even if most are still only products of the independent movie industry and/or fodder for HBO or PBS' Frontline. Yet it's possible for non-fiction films to enjoy a theatrical release and show a profit. Prime example: Fahrenheit 911.

But there are other documentaries (including those premiering at the HIFF in recent years like Fog of War and Capturing the Friedmans) which have earned critical success as well. Distributors and directors of such works were on hand at the HIFF to share stories and advice with other documentarians, and with ordinary people who simply like non-fiction films.

Jon Snow and Chris Scheider

While a few documentaries have garnered national press and praise, the panel attributed the rise of reality TV as a contributing factor for such popularity. Yet it was agreed that "reality" TV is a misleading term. Programs like Survivor are "highly manipulated and totally constructed," said one panel member.

Director Ralph Arlyck (Sean and Following Sean) defended such manipulation, noting that documentaries better be entertaining and fun like reality TV so people will want to watch them.

Distributor Mark Urman (Spellbound) was having none of that characterization. "Reality TV is garbage," he said.

There's something to be said for this kind of succinct statement, the same succinctness applying to another panel featuring documentaries, this time those made by high school students around the country. Known collectively as Youth Media, the current project concerns educational reforms. The films are not only aimed at educators but also at anyone who cares about our educational system.

Diverse shorts focused on different components of private and public sectors, most featuring outstanding teachers or pupils. The real surprise, however, was a local entry, A Dream Deferred, a short film about the Hayground School made by former student Christian Scheider.

Composed primarily of previously shot footage, the work documents the planning, constructing and implementing of Hayground; it is both informative and emotional for those who lived through the experience. Shots of the late Jeff Salaway, a parent and founding member, are potent. Images of the young children, now teenagers, who first attended classes are equally memorable.

Panel member Jon Snow, an art teacher, parent and founding member, along with Christian Scheider, confirmed our notions of what determination, trust and hard work could do when starting a new kind of school, a place that gives no tests or grades, where classes include different age groups, and a school, according to Mr. Snow, that "could be a model for public institutions."

The fourteen-year-old Mr. Scheider proved he was a good example of Hayground's educational approach in his panel comments. Where else could a student leave school at noon and go home to work on a movie?

Which leads us to believe that such devotion marks our former Hayground pupil for a life of filmmaking. "No way," says Christian. Which leads us also to believe that he made the movie as an act of community and commitment. We'd say he learned his lessons well.

THE HAMPTONS
INTERNATIONAL FILM FESTIVAL

What We Saw At The Hamptons International Film Festival

THE TOLLBOOTH (Director: Debra Kirschner)

This film is a touchingly realistic depiction of a young woman who, fresh out of college, has one dream – to make it as an artist. Sarabeth (Maria Sokoloff) is the youngest of three girls raised by loving, albeit overbearing, Jewish parents in Brooklyn. Sarabeth moves in with her sister, the "perfect" middle child, a student at Columbia Medical School. She takes a job as a waitress and paints the emotions, both rebellious and accepting, of her first year after the umbilical cord is truly cut. The ties that bind the family are tested as all three sisters follow their paths to self-discovery, even if it's not the path their parents so lovingly (and blindly) paved for them. –EJW

HOSTAGES OF HATRED (Director: Pierre Rehov)

Rarely are we able to see interviews with Palestinian people in real refugee camps. This documentary is an alarming look at the desperate situation of this area. The 1948 United Nations Resolution 194 told Palestinians that they had a "Right of Return." Most of the subjects interviewed are set on a return to a homeland that is no longer theirs. This documentary also traces how Palestinian youths are schooled to hate Israelis from the stories they hear to the textbooks they read. This conflict is so frighteningly unresolved, and this film scratches the surface of the mindset of a people whose voices we rarely hear. –EJW

KINSEY (Director: Bill Condon)

Alfred Kinsey (Liam Neeson) was a scientist who lived at a time when sex was a taboo subject in American culture. He redefined the way our country views the subject by conducting thousands of "personal histories," discovering the most intimate details of people's lives. After the publication of his first book, Sexual Behavior in the Human Male, he faced harsh criticism and complicated personal obstacles of his own. Laura Linney plays Kinsey's wife, Mac, with sensitivity and intelligence as the two probe into America's view of sex, morality, and biology. –EJW

THE ASSASSINATION OF RICHARD NIXON (Director: Niels Mueller)

This film, based on a true story, traces Sam Bicke (Sean Penn) as he tries to get his share of the American dream. Sam is an idealist and a dreamer, who believes that his honesty and good intentions will pay off. But as time passes, he suffers the harsh reality of a divorce and a job in which he feels he's compromising his principles. All the while, he watches President Nixon remind him of how lucky he is to be an American. In an effort to fight the dishonesty and unfairness of society, Sam decides to attack the source: President Richard Nixon. –EJW

UNSCREWED (Director: Leslie Shearing)

This unusually intimate film takes an up close and very personal look at a young married couple, and their painful but often humorous quest for a more fulfilling sex life. Joe and Mary have lost their original chemistry, but they are still best friends, and will go to almost any length to reignite that spark. Screenwriter and director Leslie Shearing did a great job in researching three of the many treatments available for sexual dysfunction, from role-playing with a psychiatrist, to seeking the advice of a urologist, to playing in a tantric sex den in Manhattan. Although maybe too graphically and verbally explicit for the more conservative viewer, this rather outrageous film is entertaining, well acted, and even educational. Heather Smith, as Mary, and Hans Hoffman, as Joe, were both honest and believable in two difficult roles to portray. –DT

ANGRY SKIES (Director: Casey Earl)

Guild Hall of East Hampton was packed with friends and patients of local Dr. Blake Kerr, of Wainscott Medical Center, who showed his first documentary film about his travels to Cambodia to investigate human rights. This riveting, beautifully filmed movie, in the "Films of Conflict and Resolution" category, captures the irony of this scenically beautiful country, which has been torn apart by first the violence of the Nixon/Kissinger bombings during the Viet Nam war, and then the Khmer Rouge regime which proliferated after the war, killing and torturing over 2 million people. Kerr, producer/screenwriter, and his cameraman, Casey Earl, risked their lives to show the horrors that have befallen the people of Cambodia. –DT

IMAGINARY HEROES (Director: Dan Harris)

This very dark movie deals with the internal problems of a dysfunctional family, who try to ignore major issues and cover up secrets. The wife, Sandy, played by Sigourney Weaver, and husband, played by Jeff Daniels, are having enough trouble handling Sandy's affair 18 years before with a neighbor, which resulted in the birth of their son, Tim, when their other son commits suicide. This movie draws the viewer into a tensely emotional situation as this family tries to cope with this crisis, and an estranged father (Daniels) attempts to get closer to his son, daughter and wife. Good performances were given by Weaver and Emile Hirsch. –DT

LIVING 'TIL THE END (Director: Amanda Goodwin)

Shot in an ethereal dreamy style with high contrast and saturated color, Living 'Til The End glows on screen. As Audrey, Jamie Ray Newman is luminous, offering an understated performance necessary to create believability in an unbelievable situation. Sean Maher as Jack is sometimes a bit over the top, but he has a genuine sweetness that compels you to go with him on his ride back to reality. In the beginning of the film, he is told by a psychic of his impending death, sometime before his next birthday and he reacts by attempting to protect himself from danger at all costs. Becoming desperately agoraphobic, he only leaves the house to visit his shrink. But then he meets a young woman who says that she really is dying, and he is inspired by her fearlessness to regain control over his own destiny. Living 'Til The End is a sweet movie with some shocking surprises. The director, Amanda Goodwin, also wrote, produced and edited the film. –RFS

WEAPONS OF MASS DECEPTION (Director: Danny Schetcher)

Independent filmmaker, Emmy award-winning TV journalist, network news veteran, author and media critic Danny Schechter investigates the deceptive practices of the media in covering the war in Iraq. He shows alternately the way the television media has reported the realities of the war in the US, Europe and the Middle East, and connects the inaccuracies to the control that both the Bush administration and big business in this country hold over our news sources. Schechter demonstrates how the war as seen on television was orchestrated to build up public support, and how journalists, supposedly purveyors of truth and our window onto the real world, were "muzzled" by groups with their own agendas. The film is quite effective. –RFS

BIRTH (Director: Jonathon Glazer)

Birth tells the very odd tale of a woman in her mid-thirties (played by Nicole Kidman) getting married for a second time. Just when it seems that everything is working out with her fiancé (Danny Huston) a ten year-old boy, played by Cameron Bright, shows up claiming to be the reincarnation of her late husband. The story is bizarre to say the least, but through the creativity of director Jonathon Glazer, it draws you in. The twists and turns are oddly captivating. With outstanding performances by Kidman, Huston and Bright as well as Anne Heche, Peter Stormare and Arliss Howard, the film takes us on a powerful journey that challenges the belief in life after death, as well as hope beyond normal comprehension, and the vulnerability of holding onto the past even when it can destroy the future. –KK

FIGHTING TOMMY RILEY (Director: Eddie O'Flaherty)

A unique look into the life and relationship between a budding professional boxer who "almost" made the Olympic Team a few years earlier (played by JP Davis who also wrote the screenplay) and his trainer played by Eddie Jones. Director Eddie O'Flaherty takes the audience through the highs and lows of these two characters and their struggle to deal with their tortured souls, through the story of a struggling young boxer who doesn't believe in himself and a worn down trainer who convinces him that he's got the talent and skill to win.

The dynamic performances and chemistry between the two actors is remarkable. Veteran actor Eddie Jones grabs your heart and challenges our place in society. The boxing scenes are authentically recreated. You will leave the theater believing that dreams do come true and true friendships are forever. With other notable performances by Christina Chambers, Diane M. Tayler, Paul Racci and Don Wallace. –KK

MARIAGES (Director: Valerie Guignabodet)

This French film, directed and written by Valerie Guignabodet, takes us through the preparation of a young couple getting married. The parallels between the young couple and the married and or divorced couples involved in their wedding plans makes for a comical storyline.

The film takes a humorous look at the dysfunction and difficulties that all marriages endure. A combination of jealousy, deceit and miscommunication cause a plethora of challenging situations. By adding a comic edge, we can laugh at some of our darkest fears in a relationship. The ensemble cast each displays the ability to make us laugh and cry almost simultaneously.

In the end Mariages reveals the truth about falling in and out of love as well as the trials and tribulations of what being in a marriage is all about. –KK

ART COMMENTARY With Marion Wolberg Weiss

POLITICAL DOCUMENTARIES AT HIFF: BLUES BY THE BEACH AND THE ANGRY SKIES

It's a particularly difficult task to critique non-fiction films with a political slant. Except in cases like Fahrenheit 9/ll: if you hate George Bush, you love the movie. And vice versa.

Films like Blues By the Beach and The Angry Skies are not that simple to assess. The former movie, made by Joshua Fauden, Pavla Fleisher and Jack Baxter, features Mike's Place, a popular Tel Aviv hangout before and after it was bombed. What begins as a celebration of this free-loving place, where staff and customers form a family unit, ends as a comment on personal survival.

Blues By the Beach, therefore, is not only about the war between Israel and Palestine but about the experiences of a non-Jewish man (Jack Baxter) who embarks on a meaningful journey when he leaves New York for the Middle East. As such, its structure is not unusual: documenting a conflict/concern as seen through the eyes of one person.

The Angry Skies, produced by local doctor Blake Kerr, shares a similar structure where Dr. Kerr travels to Cambodia, documenting human rights' violations and informing us about the Khmer Rouge's reign of terror. It's a personal journey as well.

Both films are well-intentioned. The Angry Skies has an additional attraction: its subject is a popular and beloved member of the East End. And well he should be, considering that Dr. Kerr represents none of the derogatory stereotypes sometimes associated with the medical profession. Simply put, he's a younger version of Marcus Welby.

If we were to judge both films using the notion that we agreed with their pro-humanitarian themes, we'd say they were excellent works. Unfortunately, there are other criteria at stake. Attention to these aspects are also important, especially for someone like yours truly who has taught courses in documentary films.

Dr. Kerr and Paul Cohen

For example, The Angry Skies seems loaded down with too much information, although its objective is educational in nature. Admittedly, "If you can show it, don't say it" is a hard axiom to practice in this particular movie, but it's worth a try. We'd certainly apply such a premise to the last shot as well: how about an image that conveys the main idea as the last thing we see, not one that relies on dialogue with no attention to meaningful visual composition?

The raw material is there to make this documentary both educational and art (eg. We like its juxtaposition of the open fields with photographic closeups of torture victims). In a nutshell, the work has a lot of things going for it; a little "tweaking" would be appropriate,

The final shot of Blues By the Beach also needs a more potent visual; in fact, the addition of visual motifs might be just the thing, allowing the movie to be a little more sentimental, an emotion the filmmakers try to avoid.

Who says documentaries shouldn't be manipulated in some way? (Even those that aren't Fahrenheit 9/11?) All films are constructed realty anyway.

HONORING THE ARTIST: SUSAN SHIEBLER

The more we talk to Bellport artist Susan Shiebler, the more surprises we experience. Here's an individual who gets to the point quickly and stays on track. But every now and then, she'll mention something in passing that's so out of context that we have to stop her for more details.

The fact that Ms. Shiebler was a dancer when she was twelve, one whose 90-year-old teacher thought she should go to Spain to become a professional, is one such example. Another is the fact that she was a Ford model at twenty, thanks to her brother who was also a model, discovered by the prestigious agency at Gurney's Inn. Ms. Shiebler's considerable talents cover all manner of things, from refinishing furniture to playing the flute to writing essays.

It's apparent that this artist is a busy person, especially if we add raising four children alone to the mix.

However, it's her family and her art, in that order, that mean the most to Ms. Shiebler. Those two aspects of her life intersect at times. Her children show great artistic talent. Ms. Shiebler explains it best: "When we go out riding, I'm always saying to them, 'Look at that lighting over there.' I believe in conditioning them at an early age.

"My youngest son, Matthew, loves baseball, but he also likes art. Christa loves animals; she's a good writer as well. So is my daughter Elissa. Michael likes science, Star Wars and writing, too."

Art and family show a connection in other ways. While Ms. Shiebler is the first artist in her family, her mother was always playing classical music in the house and was a great decorator. Her aunt was a musical conductor for forty years. Ms. Shiebler's father, Jack Ellsworth, is a well-known local radio personality.

This week's cover, "Mary's Quilt," is a painting that pays homage to another family member, Ms. Shiebler's great-great grandmother. It is she, in fact, who made the original quilt which our artist clearly treasures, citing its folds and aesthetic qualities.

While Ms. Shiebler admits to being self-taught, she also clearly cherishes her one teacher, Mary Reay: "She taught me that art is learning to see." It's apparent that Ms. Reay made a lasting impression on the blossoming artist, motivating her to "paint something" for South Bay's Annual Art Show. Much to her surprise, Ms. Shiebler won an honorable mention her first time out, garnering first place awards and "Best of Show" in subsequent years.

Even without encouragement and awards, we have a feeling that Ms. Shiebler would have eventually come to this point on her own, primarily because of her penchant for infusing her still lifes with a "divine element, a moment that can't be repeated."

We smile at the thought because Ms. Shiebler has told us, in that casual way of hers, that she "pulls things out of friends' garbage cans" for her still lifes, like baskets and crates.

Ms. Shiebler's knack for creating something special from the ordinary objects of life is unique. So is her devotion to her family. It's a wonderful combination of commitments.

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Shiebler's work can be seen at Southampton's RVS Gallery from Nov.5 thru end of year. Call 283-8546 for details. Ms. Shiebler's website is: www. susanelisestudio. com

Tile Trials

It was supposed to be a simple spruce up. What happened next surprised us both. Perhaps I should start at the beginning, on that blustery April day when my partner and I found out the house we were renting had been sold. Forget that we'd only been living there five weeks and were old enough to know better than to rent something that was for sale in the first place. But for the price the owners were asking, we couldn't imagine anyone spending that amount on a north-of-the-highway three-bedroom ranch. Silly, silly us – it was Bridgehampton, after all. So began our new hunt for the elusive affordable year-round rental.

Since I picked (and pleaded) for the last one citing all kinds of conveniences, it seemed only fair, considering the previous outcome, to let my other half cast the deciding vote. The winner... a cozy (as in small) and charming (yes, not renovated) cottage (yep, they still exist) nestled deep in Northwest woods. Its homespun quality proved winsome, but the bathroom was a fright, actually a scream-fest that no amount of scrubbing could hope to rectify. Delicately we broached the subject with the owners and secured a "just-deduct-it-off-the-rent" reply. Thus, our quest for "better (bathroom) ment" was set in motion. Besides, how much trouble could a 5' by 8' space be?

As it stood, the tub enclosure was permanently scarred with soap scum and the joints around the edge were cracked and cruddy. The fixtures were pitted and the floor was covered with a brilliant light green linoleum floral design flecked with yellow, circa 1965. The previous tenant had painted the walls and wainscoting a peculiar shade of white, which clashed not only with the original pine plank door but the overall rustic décor of the cottage. The hinges and hardware on the door were streaked with paint...but the vanity (though not our style), sink, commode and tub were in great condition.

We ripped out the vinyl tub enclosure. Underneath lay unblemished pine wainscoting. Beautiful, but hardly the waterproof surface needed to accommodate the showerhead. Since we had already agreed to tile, it was just a matter of picking some out. In the aisles of the nearest D-I-Y megastore, my worst decorating fears were confirmed. The person I'm living with is colorblind – it's the only explanation because everyone knows yellow and green do not belong in a bathroom together.

After much bickering, we compromised. The salesperson we scared away earlier waddled over to help us calculate how much tile we needed to complete the tub enclosure. We provided him with the measurements. After a few quick mental calculations, he beamed and told us we would need two boxes. Behind his back I hoisted another two on the cart, just in case. We loaded up on adhesive and grout, several pieces of cement backer board, concrete screws, rented a water saw, grabbed a D-I-Y book on tiling, and slipped through the automatic glass doors with our relationship still intact.

Once the cement board was screwed into the wainscoting and the joints taped, the tiling was ready to begin. We followed the book's instructions and smeared adhesive on the wall bit-by-bit like it was a huge one-dimensional bagel. The tiles flew from the box and onto the walls with ease and, before we knew it, we were finished with the two side walls and three boxes of tiles.

The next morning after my outdoor power-shower, I called local vendors to see if anyone had

Great Entertaining in Great Rooms

Doesn't it bother you when company is over and you have to spend the entire time in the kitchen? Sure, everyone is having a nice time, but you are missing your own party. I love to entertain, but I don't have this problem. I can prepare a fantastic dinner, and still enjoy the company of my guests the entire time. I have a "great room," which includes my open kitchen, as well as my dining area and living room. Whatever space you occupy, you can listen to and join the conversations taking place in the other spaces. This makes a great room particularly (dare I say it?) great for entertaining, and I take full advantage of it.

When I have a small number of people over, I usually grill outside or cook something inside that takes very little time, so the virtues of the great room are not as obvious. I spend most of the time with my guests in the living room, and just dart in and out when needed. Sometimes, when I am in the kitchen, my guests keep me company at the island, which has two seats, but I am usually not there for very long anyway. And once we sit down at the dining table, I usually do not need to get up during the dinner. For these types of occasions, I am glad that my great room was designed to create a feeling of slightly different spaces, and I have chosen furnishings to accentuate that feeling of separateness.

It is during the big dinner party when the great room seems to transform itself into a single, warm space. When I entertain six or more people, I usually prepare a huge, gourmet, multi-course meal – salad, soup, pasta, main course and dessert. This keeps me in the kitchen during most of the party, so I am glad that the kitchen opens to the rest of the space. When the first guests arrive, they usually keep me company in the kitchen. But as others arrive, people gravitate to the living room to enjoy the hors d'oeuvres. I remain in the kitchen, where I am able to enjoy to the same music playing in the living room and join in on the conversations. I wander over to sit down when I can, and people wander in to check on me, but I never disappear.

Once we sit down for the first course and I can spend some time face-to-face with my guests, I am glad that I hadn't missed any conversation. When people finish the course, I can clear the plates and put the final touches on the next course, all the while staying involved with my guests. I then bring out the next course, and the cycle begins again, and again, through several courses. Sit down, clear, complete the next course, serve – without missing the party or being missed by the guests. At some point, I will even put dishes in my almost silent dishwasher and run it; no one notices. When dessert is served, I can finally stay seated for a while, without worrying about what has to be done next. It is nice to be able to relax, but the truth is I had fun the entire time, because I never had to give up acting as host, even while working in the kitchen.

Before I moved to the Hamptons, I had a tiny apartment in the City, so I did not get to entertain that often, or for many people. And when I did entertain, I never got to see people, as I was stuck in my tiny kitchen, away from the guests, without room to have someone keep me company. Now, with my great room, I can throw amazing, sit-down dinner parties for as many as 12 people. All the guests feel like they have a cozy place to enjoy hors d'oeuvres, a lovely table for dinner and a huge open kitchen in which to keep me company, and I am happy to be part of the event throughout the whole evening.

Life At The Bottom

As children, many of us thought of basements as dark and frightening places filled with cobwebs and the unknown. Now we realize it's just a matter of poor lighting and a lack of dusting. The basement, if you can manage to clear some room, is the ideal place for creativity. Sure you're thinking, with no natural light how on earth can it foster creativity? The secret is in its isolation.

My basement is unfinished; simply the exposed, poured cement foundation and the beams that support the first floor of the house. Despite the sound of it, the area is the perfect place for peace and quiet, not exactly suitable for meditation, but a great place for a studio and workshop. Most people aren't lucky enough to build a studio on the ground floor of their house because livable space is at a premium. Occasionally the garage works well, but rarely is it insulated and heated, plus, where would you ever park the car?

The basement, at least mine, receives enough warmth through the floor of the house that even in the dead of winter it is adequately heated and, because it's underground and has thick cement walls, it also remains quite cool in the summer. The only climate problem that occurs is in the form of moisture, but that is easily remedied with a dehumidifier.

After climate control, the next important aspect of creating a proper studio is lighting. Basements, depending on when they were built, have different lighting schemes. While some use florescent bulbs and others use incandescent, the decision is really up to you; it's a matter of preference and cost. Fixture replacement, although simple sounding, can have many hidden costs and can create more problems than it solves. Many times when a homeowner hires a professional electrician to change from incandescent to florescent lighting, they learn that the entire basement needs to be rewired, not just new fixtures installed.

As I said, it's a matter of preference; different people have different opinions on lighting. Some feel that florescent bulbs give a stale glow, while others find that it's a more even light and incandescent lights cast too much shadow. I find a combination of the two work quite well; florescent light on the ceiling and a lamp or two to brighten the particular area of work.

Depending on what you are doing in your studio, running water may be necessary, which can lead to additional costs, but if you already have your washing machine in the basement, that means the plumbing is already there, which can be a huge bonus. It is important to speak to a reputable plumber and research building codes and permits before installing anything.

Many people do not have the luxury of having the entire basement to work with. They usually have to share the area with storage. It is a good idea to delineate where the storage area ends and the studio area begins. Although these lines should not be considered steadfast, it is easier to lay out a productive work space when everything has a predetermined area. You don't want to be painting next to your great-grandmother's quilts or using a nail gun near a family portrait. By establishing boundaries, you can avoid any loss of heirlooms.

Space to store materials is also a chief issue. Everything should have its place, and that place is generally on shelves and in drawers. If you've recently remodeled your kitchen, those old cabinets work extremely well. You can also buy inexpensive shelves at Home Depot or build them yourself. Mason jars and empty soup cans are ideal for storing pencils and pens, as well as nails, screws and other small objects.

A comfortable and clean work space is also important. Whether it is a table, easel, or workbench, giving yourself enough room to work can be the difference between a useful and a useless studio. Craft stores can generally help you out in this area. Explain what you are trying to do and they will surely have a suggestion or two about the supplies you will need.

What you do in your studio is really up to you. The goal is to make an area that was otherwise considered storage as functional an environment as possible. The utilization of negative space, especially in small houses, can make a great deal of difference and can lead to peace and productivity where once there was nothing but cobwebs and the unknown.

Fall Into Decorating

Forget spring! One of the most colorful and exciting times of the year is autumn, when the leaves on the trees light up in a cornucopia of warm, yet brilliant shades – taxi cab yellow, fire engine red, sunset orange. Fields on the North and South Fork come alive with vibrant cabbage and pumpkin patches, while farm stands overflow with colorful gourds, Indian corn and hardy mums. Nature provides wonderful inspiration for seasonal decorating and here are a few suggestions to help you get started…

Why not begin at your front door? Our neighbors down the block created a simple and unique tribute to fall by using a red wagon, which they adorned with wheat and layered with multicolored gourds. In the center was placed a healthy pumpkin and on either side of the wagon were two sets of potted mums. Or perhaps your window boxes need refreshing? Now is the time to plant pansies and violas. Their dramatic colors – the fiery yellow-orange of Dynamite Wine Splash, Sorbet Coconut Swirl, Purple Rain – are sure to add cheer as the thermometer dips.

Another cool-weather-loving floral is the fall daisy, also known as the chrysanthemum. Whether used inside or outside the home, mums enliven the season with an abundance of color. Placed in terra cotta pots by the front door, they're also great for borders or mass plantings – anywhere you want to add color. Traditional fall hues include yellow, orange, maroon, rust and red – but new shades are introduced each year. Just remember to keep them in the sun and watered, and they'll produce beautiful flowers for well into fall.

Give your home a warm and cozy autumnal feel with festive decorations. To bring the vibrant hues of the season inside, consider miniature pumpkins, apples, gourds, nuts and Indian corn. They are terrific accents and will work well throughout the season and into the holidays. For starters, select gourds with unusual shapes and colors,, then mix with mini-pumpkins, apples and large-shelled nuts to create harvest baskets that can be spread throughout the home. Spruce up the mantelpiece with the bounty of the season by stringing a garland of dried fruits and nuts along with fall foliage. On top, place assorted gourds, pinecones and candles for an eclectic harvest theme.

Get cooking in the kitchen by applying some of the same design techniques. Outfit your table with placemats and napkins to complement the colors of the season – toasty browns, harvest golds, oranges, reds and greens are all great additions. Create seasonal bouquets for the dining table by filling wooden bowls or low platters with fall leaves, pinecones, Indian corn, dried berries, nuts and colorful gourds.

As we bid farewell to the sun's beaming rays, bring light and warmth inside with candles. Choosing candles in harvest shades will keep the theme "glowing" inside the home. If you're feeling crafty, create homemade candleholders by scooping out the inside of a gourd, squash or pumpkin so that a pillar candle or votive will fit snugly inside. Or place a tin can inside the scooped out center and fill with twigs, flowers and leaf stems. Voila, a harvest vase like no other!

Changing drapes and area rugs is another way to bring color and warmth into the home as the seasons change. Not only will the transformation breathe new energy and provide a fresh perspective during the long winter months, it will also keep "cabin fever" at bay. So, too, will the addition of a luxe cashmere throw for the couch. Think about replacing summer pillow covers with rich, velvet or chenille in sumptuous autumn shades.

And don't forget about the other senses when decorating for fall. A bubbling pot of fragrant potpourri will fill the home with delicious and delightful aromas. To make your own potpourri, add cloves, citrus or apple peels and cinnamon sticks to a pot of water. Simmer over very low heat and enjoy the lovely scent wafting throughout your home.

It's easy to fall in love with your living space by adding little touches to freshen the look of your home as well as uplift your mood. Instead of slipping into a pre-winter slump, use nature's dazzling palette to inspire seasonal decorating. The possibilities are plentiful and a fall makeover will not only capture the spirit of the season, but add spice and warmth inside and out.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

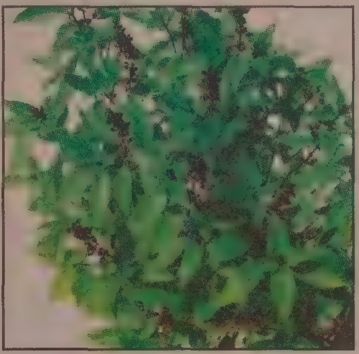
Indoor Herbs Lift Spirits

As the Hamptons landscape grows desolate in late Fall, it is easy to counteract the gloominess that accompanies this time of year by growing a few pots of herbs. At Rock Cottage, the greenhouse is stocked with enough pots to provide fragrance and seasoning throughout the winter. For those without access to a greenhouse, herbs can be successfully grown in pots that are placed in a sunny window.

Growing indoor herbs can be fun and rewarding. It is, however, a task that requires some diligence and adherence to certain rules. First, not all herbs are appropriate for indoor gardening. Over the years, we have had the best luck with basil, chives, thyme, tarragon, parsley, and marjoram. For those with a greenhouse or conservatory, dill and coriander are also good choices.

To start the growing process, use a seedling flat filled with a good seed-starter mix. Be sure the planting medium and flat are clean. Place the selected herb seeds on top of the starter mix and cover ever so lightly with additional starter mix. Press the soil down and water well (if the mix is dry, use a spray container to wet the soil and to prevent the seeds from spilling out). Cover the flat with plastic wrap to create a humid environment and to keep the temperature and humidity even (65-70 degrees). As the seeds start to sprout, remove the plastic wrap and keep the flat evenly moist. When seedlings have set two rows of leaves, transplant the seedlings into six-inch pots filled with a loamy, easily draining soil. Label pots and place them in the sunniest window available.

Light and space are the most important factors for success with winter herbs. Herbs require intense, direct sunlight and need to receive at least six hours of light daily. A sunny, south-facing window is the best location. Pots should be placed in an area where there will be adequate air circulation. (Lack of air circulation seems to be a magnet for pests!) Placing pots on open, gravel-filled trays where they have good drainage and gain the benefit of the humidity from the excess water runoff works well. Turn pots every few days to ensure all sides receive light, and to keep the plants erect.



Because herbs grow slower indoors than outdoors, water cautiously. Many winter herb plants fail because of over-watering. To support efficient evaporation, use terra cotta pots, never plastic. Before watering, feel the surface of pots to see if the pots feel cold. If they do, delay watering for a few days. When watering, use room temperature water to avoid shocking the plants. Plants benefit from a regular spraying with a fine mist of water. This helps keep dust from accumulating and increases the humidity around the plants.

Many gardeners like to feed their herb plants on a weekly basis. Our finding is that, again, be careful about over-feeding. Use organic fertilizers instead of processed, salt-based products, and feed every six weeks or so. Spreading a bit of fireplace ash around the tops of pots intermittently also seems to foster growth.

At Rock Cottage, we typically keep the thermostat at about 60 degrees during winter. This seems to be an ideal indoor temperature for herbs. Herbs do not seem to do well if subjected to extremes of temperature in winter, e.g., below 55 degrees or above 70 degrees.

Picking herb leaves to use in cooking can be done all winter, provided the plants have grown to a height of six inches or more. Be careful to leave sufficient foliage on the plants so they will continue to grow. The exception to this rule is chives, which seem to thrive on being mowed down. The plants spring back quickly!

Winter herbs sometimes suffer from spider mites, whiteflies, and aphids. Pests thrive in rooms that lack air circulation and in dry conditions. Dousing plants every few weeks with a solution of one gallon of water to two tablespoons of Ivory soap works well. (Be sure to cover the undersides of leaves.) Using a fan to increase air circulation also helps.

Growing plants seems an innate drive in most gardeners! Growing winter herbs is a great way to satisfy this need throughout the winter months. The advantage is multifold: the delight of growing plants, smelling the aromatic oils, using the leaves for cooking, and counteracting the gloominess of winter: good reasons for getting some herbs started soon!

Be Our Guest

Now that the holidays are fast approaching, so too will guests be arriving. Where do you put them? The answer is, of course, the guest room. But what is really so wonderful about this room is that it doesn't have to sit idle all year long waiting for guests to arrive on those special holiday occasions. It is a room that wears many hats. Its versatility can provide you and your family with a den as well as a home/office, if it's designed as a user-friendly space. Whether or not it is being occupied by guests, its ambiance should put anyone instantly at ease.

The furnishings in such a room should be adaptable and functional. In other words, pick pieces of furniture that have multiple uses. A table, for example, may be an area for both eating or working. A storage chest may serve as a night stand, foot rest or even an extra seat. A sofa bed or day bed are wonderful options for resting or reading.

Primarily, you want the guest room to have a real homey feel. You want your guests to feel as you do, right at home. When you walk into the guest room you want to feel as if you can just plop right down, watch TV, read or sleep.

Window treatments are also an important part of the guest room because they regulate the amount of light that comes into the room. Light streaming into a window at sunrise is certainly not conducive for sleeping. No one enjoys a rude awakening.

Another thing to consider is space. When guests arrive, they need a place to unpack and put things. So, make sure you empty a few drawers and make some room in the closet during their visit.

The real test for a successful guest room is to make sure it is comfortable enough for you. Then it is probably comfortable enough for your guests as well.

Once your guests have settled into the guest room the big question arises: what do you do about bathroom facilities? Let's face it – no one wants their guests walking through other parts of their house to get to the bathroom. After all, no one wants the embarrassment of being caught with their pants down.

A half bath is the perfect solution. What's great about the half bath is that the main fixtures, namely a sink and a toilet, allow you to create a bath room with personality. Through the use of color and accessories you can capture a mood or a moment. There is no limit to decorating ideas. Use your imagination. If you are a tree lover like myself, then go for earth colors of greens and browns, a wooden toilet seat; wooden faucet handles for the sink. A small wooden side table tucked underneath the sink can be your vanity, with a mirror adorned by a wooden frame hanging from above. Accessorize with a wooden soap dish and a potpourri of scented wood chips and wooden towel racks on which to hang those brown and green towels. Add a wooden coat rack for your robe and maybe even some wood shelves on which to place reading material. Bring the outside in by adding some finishing touches of wall hangings of trees, and you've got your own personal arboretum. Although the half bath is small in size. it is large enough for you to truly see the forest through the trees.

The main thing is that you want the half bath to be fairly close to where the guest room is. Due to its size, it can be tucked away in areas underneath stairwells or even inside utility closets. Doors that swing in or out may limit the area's space and put a real cramp on the user. Making the pocket door a wonderful option.

The main things to remember about the half bath is that it should be conveniently located and private. This is one area of your home where both you and your guests don't necessarily want to be running into each other.

By preparing your guest room and half bath for holiday visitors, you can truly make it a season of good cheer and continued friendship for the new year.

Using Color and Finish to Add New Life to Rooms

With housing prices what they are in the Hamptons, many people are turning to remodeling older homes in need of TLC, or to less expensive, but characterless, spec houses. Erica-Lynn Huberty's company, Blossom Haven, is often called upon to turn outdated or lifeless rooms into beautiful, inviting interiors, without having to completely gut-renovate.

Blossom Haven specializes in decorative painting & interior design. Huberty has been a professional fine artist and designer for over 10 years, with her work residing in the private collections of several celebrated musicians, artists, and prominent business people. She is known for her excellent sense of color and her technical abilities in murals, trompe l'oeil, and all manners of faux finishes. Huberty can create an historic mural for a restored 1840s home, or turn a dark, 1970s ranch into a light and color-filled country retreat.

"It's hard sometimes to have a vision of what a home's real potential can be. That's where I come in," Huberty says. "Barring any serious structural problems, a little plastering, a little sanding, and a custom wall finish with rich, subtle color, can completely turn a home around."

Huberty is also trained in restoring and color-matching, and can restore existing historic murals or painted furniture, a process that takes a keen eye and a delicate hand.

It is not unusual for Huberty to create custom stencils inspired by a client's bed linens, or to use unorthodox interior design ideas to get the effect she knows her client really wants. Her clients are usually amazed at how her work really transforms a space.

Recently, Huberty completed several projects on a new home in East Quogue. "The spaces there were barren, cold, without character. It was originally a spec house. The owners really wanted to make the space their own, but also wanted to maintain a clean, light-filled feeling."

In one bathroom in the house, Huberty implemented a stone-like finish with subtle, fossilized shells on the wall, the colors bringing out a beautiful marble vanity that had previously seemed unremarkable. In another room, too-high ceilings without crown molding gave the space a cold feeling. Huberty added trompe l'oeil molding along the top of the wall, giving old-world character, whimsy, and a better height to the walls.

In yet another room, "A strange, almost claustrophobic little water closet," Huberty cleverly painted antiqued flowers on two of the walls, hanging a mirror that overlapped the design on one, and reflected back the design on the other. "Now that little space seems so warm, and bigger, and you are immediately invited in by the mirror and the motif as you open the door," she explains.

In another home, in Hampton Bays, Huberty transformed three awkward, dark hallways. In one, she hung wainscoting, antiqued and pickled it, then created a wrap-around French countryside mural on the upper half of the wall. In another, she brought a subtle, russet red and tranquil beige together, and painted faux trim molding. The "molding" was painted "like a giant picture frame on a large, bare wall," she explains, "and in the middle, I hung a lavender wreath – a real one." In the third hall, using the same red, "to make the transition from one room to the next," she created a striped and stenciled "wall paper."

"I'm really lucky in that I love what I do," Huberty says of her sometimes hectic job schedule. "And I love the variety. It's important to me that each and every job I do is unique – there's little point in everyone's home looking the same, because how many people are really the same?"

Erica-Lynn Huberty, at Blossom Haven Decorative Painting & Design, can be reached at 631-725-4785, North Haven.

Your First Apartment

Your first apartment. The idea conjures up a host of feelings and images. You are no longer living under your parents' roof, having to abide by their rules. They can no longer walk into your room without knocking. You can come home at two o'clock in the morning without someone questioning where you have been all night. And, along with having your own space comes the freedom of being able to decorate it any way you want. But moving out of your parents' house probably means that you are on a budget, and furnishing an apartment can be an expensive endeavor. In the following paragraphs I hope to give some practical and useful tips about how to cost effectively furnish a first apartment.

In terms of furniture, I have one word of advice: IKEA. It almost sounds cliché, but IKEA has very reasonably priced, cool looking furniture. Sure, you have to put it together yourself, but look what you just paid for it! IKEA has a user friendly website (www.IKEA-usa.com), but who doesn't want to take a fun-filled trip to an IKEA warehouse? Fortunately, there are two IKEA warehouses nearby, one in Elizabeth, NJ and one right here on Long Island in Hicksville. The warehouse has more furniture than you could imagine exists in one place, and it is all set up in mock rooms, to give people decorating ideas. Aside from furniture, IKEA also has lighting, kitchen supplies, rugs, bedding and towels. In short, everything one would need for a new apartment.

Once you have taken care of the furniture problem, the next challenge should be finding bedding. My favorite place to get bedding has always been Pottery Barn, but it can get a bit pricy. I suggest that you check out Pottery Barn's recent offshoot, Pottery Barn Teen (www.pbteen.com). They have great duvet covers in tie-dye patterns, and bright florals and stripes, among others. At the regular Pottery Barn, a duvet cover averages $150, but at Pottery Barn Teen, they average $90. The website also has great rugs, window treatments and colorful wall décor to brighten up any room.

Okay, furniture and bedding have been taken care of. There are still lots of little things you will need to make the apartment complete. I will call these accessories. And there is nowhere better to go for accessories than Target. Unlike some other warehouse stores, Target has items that you would actually want in your apartment, not things that you have to buy because they are cheap. I suggest going to Target for towels, dishes and silverware. They also have a huge selection of good looking throw pillows, rugs, candles, mirrors and wall decorations. If you can't make it to a Target store, the website may be even better – it is massive (www.target.com).

Storage is always of concern in an apartment. There never seems to be enough closet or shelf space. In terms of storage, organization is key and clutter is the enemy. Stores like Kmart and Walmart sell large, plastic storage bins which can be filled to capacity with things like sweaters and old books, stacked in the top of the closet and forgotten about. Another great storage place is under the bed. You can buy similar bins that are specifically made to fit under the bed and store all of your extra stuff out of sight. And if you have extra shelf space, but a lot of things lying around, many stores have begun making wicker and canvas baskets to throw clutter in and put on a shelf.

When furnishing an apartment on a budget, it is important to be creative. I am a big fan of looking through the sale or clearance section on websites, where you can find normally expensive items for relatively cheap. Stores such as Pottery Barn and Crate & Barrel generally have good sale sections. Also, if you are in an area where you can do so, check out yard and tag sales. Very interesting and unique furniture and other items can be found at such sales, and the prices can usually be bargained down.

Most of the stores that I have mentioned are somewhat interchangeable. Pretty much everything you need can easily be purchased at Target or IKEA. But furnishing and decorating an apartment, especially your first, should be fun. It's best to look at all of your options before making a purchase. And thanks to the Internet, comparing the styles and prices of different stores has never been easier. So, I send you off, armed with the knowledge you need to furnish your first apartment. Happy shopping!

Living Simple, Living Small

In April of 2001, I purchased a studio condo with an expansive view of Fort Pond Bay. It was to be a weekend escape from the stress of living and working in New York City. However, everything changed on 9/11.

I lost my home and all its contents. Five days later, I lost my job. My dog, Jasper, and I retreated to Montauk, a place some call "the end," but for me was "the beginning."

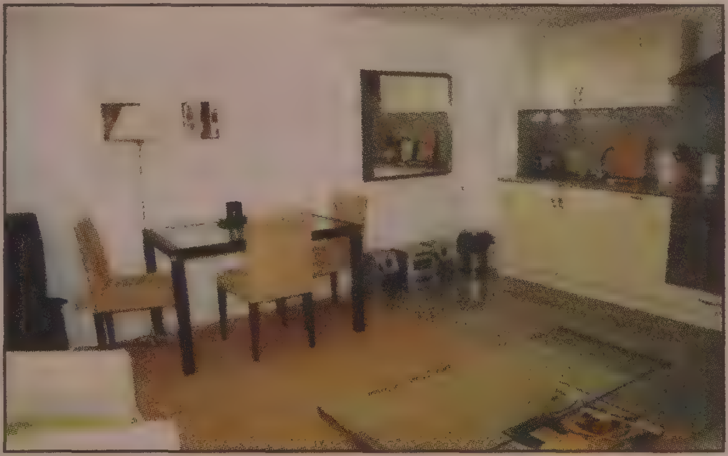
Walk through my front door and you will be captivated by the view. It will take a while, but soon you will realize the size of the space, and then inquire as to how I can live and work in just one room.

Having tight quarters does not faze me. I grew up happily spending summer weekends living aboard a 40' boat with my parents, three brothers, and our dog and cat.

In comparison, this place is more than ample. At 453 square feet, the main room is 20 feet in length and, at its widest, has 16 feet of depth. Living here is akin to living in a roomy tent. One wall is nothing more than two sets of 8' sliding glass doors, and the ceiling boasts two skylights that capture tumultuous clouds by day and bold, determined constellations by night.

The interior is decorated courtesy of my brother, Gregory. His expertise is designing small places on small budgets, and delivering maximum space, function, comfort and, of course, beauty. He might dub my décor minimalist, but I find it to be luxurious.

Our goal was not to compete with the breathtaking panorama. Rather, Gregory framed it, by using tones of sand and ivory. Scale was critical, so he selected two crème colored settee sofas that were slip covered, making them easy to keep clean. This is compulsory when you have a big, black dog that roams the beach nosing every piece of seaweed and thinks nothing of plunging into the surf to pursue gulls.



The hard wood accent pieces are stained dark cherry to provide warmth that is especially appreciated when the cold weather blanches color from the land and the bay turns nickel gray. Every piece serves two or more purposes. The ottoman acts as a coffee table and holds linens and quilts, and the sofas convert to full-size beds for guests. At sunset the kitchen counter hosts formal candlelight dinner parties, but by morning is an office complete with laptop, printer and phone/fax/copier, all of which are stored in a customized closet featuring built-in files and drawers.

The entry hall is also the library, consisting of four rolling bookshelves, and what was once a bar cabinet is now a petite entertainment center. This is a home where everything is always in its place and there is a place for everything.

Interior design is a family affair; my sister-in-law, Joni, recommended further opening the room by mirroring one wall. It gives the illusion of doubling the space and brings the outside in. From any point, you can see the bay.

Weather permitting, there is dining alfresco. The outdoor furniture is weathered teak, its silvery ash complementing the cedar siding and pine scrub landscape.

After moving here, where "delivery" is as rare as a yellow cab, I learned to cook and surprisingly found a genuine pleasure in the task. The summer scent of finely chopped basil, the winter fragrance of roasting chicken, the everyday intoxicating aroma of freshly ground coffee beans, are glad-

Celebrating Your Patio Even As The Thermometer Drops

As the colder months creep upon us, we need to adjust our outdoor spaces, because otherwise they will be swallowed up by the chill. I love sitting out on the porch, and it doesn't have to be sacrificed due to the changing of the season. I just have to be more prepared to combat the cold. That's all. I can still gaze at the stars in the crystal sky while I observe my breath emerging from my mouth in a cloud. I just have to wrap myself in a quilt, fill my mug with piping hot tea, and light glowing lanterns across the porch, readily prepared for a chilly autumn evening.

The other night I enjoyed a beautiful evening at JL East. There was a bar set up outside with tables and great potential for stargazing. Just one problem: the air felt remarkably like winter. It was the night that prodded me to whip out my scarf. It was the night I gave up sandals. So how could I give in to the temptation of an outdoor patio when I knew my nose would probably freeze off my face? Because the management of JL East thought ahead. They noticed people's pleasure in enjoying late summer evenings under the starry sky, and they believed this enjoyment of outdoor spaces could continue into the colder months. The patio was dotted with glowing heat lamps, warming us all as we smiled up at the moon.

Patio heaters are an excellent method of keeping the outside warm enough to utilize all year long, even in our ever-changing climate. You can get a large, freestanding patio heater that looks almost like a street lamp, or you could opt for smaller, subtler heater that rests on the table. These outdoor heaters emit heat in the same manner as the sun, meaning that they heat up the object, but not the air in between. One option is the Endless Summer Tabletop Heater, which warms up a ten-foot radius. It's $109, and available on Amazon.com. Two other options are the Lotus and the Lifestyle Al Fresco brands.

The night ocean air is no longer a welcome cool. You can no longer sink bare feet into hot sand left over from a summer day. The ocean at night is now windy, wet, and frigid. Still beautiful, but getting out of your car is much less tempting. That eliminates the beloved bonfire from the evening's activities. Or does it? The copper fire pit by Unique Arts or the copper Chimenea, by Plow & Hearth, both reserve you the right to have outdoor fires all winter long. They'll give you the warmth on cold nights to sit out on your patio, sipping hot chocolate and toasting marshmallows. Pick up a cord of firewood on your way home from work for a pleasant evening curled up around the fire and gazing at the stars, a perfect activity usually relegated to the summer months. Both products are available at Amazon.com.

Once you have your heat pumping on the outdoor patio, you can curl up in a handmade afghan or quilt, wrap your hands around your steaming mug, and sip on any selection of hot beverages. Tea is a great accompaniment to a chilly autumn night. For the caffeine fiends who plan to make the night a long one, try the Republic of Tea's green or red tea. They are both packed with antioxidants to keep those seasonal colds from coming on. For those of you who prefer to wind down the evenings with a caffeine-free tea, Chamomile is always a good pre-bed-beverage. My favorite variation on that is the Celestial Seasonings Chamomile Mango. Caffeine free, with the soothing properties of chamomile and the pleasant zing of mangoes.

One good thing about cool nights is that the mosquitoes are no longer a problem, so you can get rid of that stinky citronella and start burning beautiful candles and lanterns and attractive incense. Paper lights or lanterns are available all around town, at stores like the Romany Kramoris Gallery or Flashbacks in Sag Harbor. They offer a pleasant glow to your patio. Light up the night with soft purples or yellows, or deepen the mood with a glowing red lantern. Hurricane lamps also cast dancing shadows on your evening card game or your cozy novel, and the whipping wind won't be able to touch them. You can find a selection at any Hildreth's location.

Even though the summer months are long gone, that doesn't mean that you can't get out and gaze at the full moon. Fall and winter hold the promise of changing and falling leaves, of deer looking up through snowy branches, of crystal blue skies sprinkling white fluffy snow. Don't miss it all because of the technicality that you didn't prepare for the season. Arm yourself against the cold, and your fall and winter months will be full of the beauty and potential they deserve.

The Essential Library / Music Room

My house was a noisy place when I was growing up: four siblings and no room to go to when you needed to study or just sit and think. When I turned thirteen, I expressed a desire to learn how to play the piano. I had already been playing guitar for several years and my parents knew that I was serious about it so, desirous themselves to have a piano in the house, they decided to purchase a baby grand. In addition to my interest in music, I had recently had a short story published in Life magazine as a result of winning first prize in my elementary school's writing contest, and this concurrent interest in music and writing gave my mother an idea. She suggested to my dad that the guest room, which was about 12 x 14 feet in size, should be converted into a library/music room to accommodate both the piano and my artistic aspirations. Of course I was elated to learn that one entire room of the house might be dedicated solely for my own use, so I did everything I could to push forward my mother's idea every chance I got. It didn't take long for my dad to come around. Seeing that I had been taking music lessons on my chosen instrument for many years, while simultaneously being applauded for my nascent literary accomplishments, he hired a friend to help him remake the guest room into a library/music room.

It took roughly about 2 weeks for the work to be completed, and when it was done I was astonished at how wonderful this formerly nondescript room had become.

The entire contents of the guest room – bed, night tables, armoire, bureau, and all peripherals had been removed. The carpet, too, was gone, revealing a beautiful hardwood floor underneath. Wall-to-wall mahogany bookshelves were added, old wallpaper was replaced with new wallpaper, beautiful French doors replaced the old door, and a lovely Persian rug adorned the center of the floor. The combined effect was one of distinct elegance – a room that promised quietude, relaxation, and study.

In the weeks that followed, most of my family's books found their way onto the library bookcase, with a special spot reserved for my music books. I wasn't too happy with this at first, but was reminded by my dad that while the room was mine solely during those times when I was studying or playing, other members of the family – including my 4 siblings – would have full use of it as well. Of course, this rather equitable arrangement didn't sit too well with a selfish 13-year-old artist in the making, but I soon became acclimated to the fact that the reason this remodeling project had taken place at all was due only partly to satisfy my budding ambitions. The truth was that my mother had always cherished the notion of a library/music room – a concept that was prevalent in many homes during the earlier part of the twentieth century, but which had declined in succeeding decades – and this unselfish desire to create a little oasis of solitude in an otherwise noisy household was meant to benefit the entire family, not just me.

My mother's original concept worked quite well. In addition to my use of the room for music lessons, studying, and writing, one of my brothers set up an easel in the corner of the room and practiced painting and drawing, sometimes while I was playing the piano. He used to tell me that my music was a big influence upon his mood, which in turn helped him to become a better painter. My mother used the room during the evening, after we had gone to bed and she had some time to herself to crochet or do crossword puzzles. She claimed the room had a relaxing effect upon her and helped with her concentration. My dad would often join her in the library with a book or magazine in his hand, happily catching up on his reading. For my part, it was the room where I really learned how to play the piano.

The decision my parents made to create our library/music room proved to be invaluable to my entire family and myself. It was nice to know that no matter how noisy the world, or our own home, might become, we always had a little fortress of solitude to retreat to.

Where To Hide From Your Parents

A teenager's bedroom can be difficult terrain to trek. Any parent or former teen knows that those difficult years are fraught with wild swings of emotion ranging from a staunch desire for independence, to the leftovers of a childhood need for a parent's love and stability. The biggest mistake any parent can make is trying to control every aspect of their adolescent's décor choices. As someone who once had my walls painted black in huge sections, bearing heavy metal skulls and punk rock logos, I know it was only a phase and as a grown man I'm not stuck with a proclivity for the macabre in my home. It doesn't mean I didn't retain a certain flare for the offbeat, but we all grow up and we all acquire certain tastes with age and maturity.

The first thing to ponder is what your kid will be doing in what is surely their place for privacy, reflection, self-expression and entertainment. Let's face it, a teen's room is an escape from parents and certain ideologies they might currently reject. At 16, being sent to my room for acting up wasn't exactly punishment. Your job is to balance a certain authority with the concessions of freedom a high school kid needs. Most kids will find their room to be a place to study – hopefully – to be alone, listen to music, and entertain friends. If they haven't done anything to hurt their rights and privileges, it's a good idea to allow them some. It's okay to let their room be autonomous from the colors and design of the house. When they move out or go to college, you can always redecorate.

Start with the basics. Kids should have a desk to do homework and organize their papers or keep their computer if they're lucky enough to have one. I suppose most kids do, nowadays. Find a comfortable chair to go with it and try to keep things clean and simple to assist concentration and deter distraction. They will create enough chaos with collages, movie posters, band imagery, and whatever madness they can dream up. Bookshelves might encourage a kid to fill them. Hopefully you can provide them with a closet to keep their clothes off the floor. Image is important to teens, and their clothes are a big part of it. Sit down with your kid and discuss how you might arrange things. Giving them choices and the pride of ownership will improve their self-esteem and ideally instill a sense of respect for what they have. He or she might even keep the place clean if they feel it is truly theirs. Provide CD racks and shelves for DVDs and videos if they're allowed a personal TV – a choice you have to make. These things will again keep the room clean and organized and create an atmosphere of personal space. You both win.

In a few years they'll be off to college and probably living in self-imposed squalor. This is a chance to teach them the basics of shopping for furniture and making intelligent decisions about what to buy. Include them in picking out the various pieces to go in the room. You will both find things to agree on and can share mutual respect. If you give them the opportunity to choose what they like, you might have a better leg to stand on when you ask them to remove certain decorative items you may find offensive or inappropriate, like liquor ads and the like.

I was a slob. My mother finally gave up and simply never looked into my room. This can work, but I'm sympathetic toward parents in need of order. Teens are stubborn and self-absorbed much of the time, but when presented with the argument that they have their freedom as long as it is coupled with a respect for you, you'll probably find a happy medium. I've hammered the point home, but the main issue is balance. Iron fisted rule doesn't help anyone and is a recipe for rebellion and your teen's desire to stay as far away from home as possible. Give them some rope, if they hang themselves it's no longer on you. But please, let them be part of the process. You might find it helps you bond. Maybe even go with them to K-mart to pick out the best shade of black paint by Martha Stewart. Their room shouldn't be a prison, no matter what brand of paint you choose.

Gardening Under Glass

When traveling through European countries, one quickly notices that many homes have gardening enclosures: cold frames, greenhouses, solariums, or plastic-covered tents. These enclosures extend the growing season to year-round. In contrast, few homes in the United States are equipped for year-round gardening.

There is, of course, something self-indulgent about a greenhouse. Frankly, it is not a necessity. However, wanting a place to "muck about" year round, we installed a greenhouse two years ago. We steered away from the unsightly lean-tos that typically end up as family rooms. Rather, we installed a standalone, glass house equipped with watering, ventilation, and lighting systems. It has been the best investment of our lives!

The greenhouse provides space to store summer tropicals, provides year-round greenery, and fills weekends with the fun of herb and flower gardening. It has also eliminated the need to buy all those flats of annuals each spring. We now grow our own! In addition, the greenhouse provides an idyllic environment in which we sit among the flowers – like being on a tropical island without the travel!

Glassed-in structures use solar energy and insulation to create a microclimate. For those of us who now harvest fresh greens in January, or have flowers blooming in February, the attraction of this type of gardening is enormous. The cost has not been exorbitant.

Greenhouses come in a variety of sizes, shapes, and levels of grandeur. They can be temporary enclosures made of metal hoops and plastic sheeting, attached solaria, standalone/attached greenhouses, or formal conservatories. Selection is important and ought to reflect the desired purpose. Our research led us to select a structure with glass (expensive to install, but capable of lasting for generations). Glass permits more light to enter than the plastic or polycarbonate alternatives. Aesthetically, glass also looks better. It met our needs to have a fully functional, working greenhouse. We opted for tempered glass, which is three to four times more resilient than plain glass. We decided against insulated (double-paned) glass because of the additional weight and cost.

As we speak with friends, many are afraid of initiating a greenhouse project: concerned it will end up as an unsightly room; afraid insects and pests will take over and create a browning mess of rotting plants; fearful they might lose interest and be stuck with an empty glass structure; think it might be too much bother; and, too expensive. We shared in some of these fears, but found most are myths.

If you can get past the fears, many distributors will gladly assist with design and installation. Our research identified several quality vendors: Texas Greenhouses, Florian, Janca, Sturdi-Built, and Vixen Hill. After much deliberation, we selected Texas Greenhouses because the company frequently installs greenhouses on the East End. They also had great references. Texas Greenhouses also constructs greenhouses with metal with baked-on, colored finishes. The company offers stock-sized components that can be combined creatively for a custom effect. The advantages of this approach are on cost and result.

Location is critical when installing a greenhouse, as you want to select an area that receives plenty of sun. Our goal was to create a square greenhouse located in an area receiving full sun in winter and dappled sun in spring, summer, and autumn (to eliminate the potential of overheating and sunburn to plants).

Because of the weight of glass, the greenhouse required a building permit and installation of a concrete foundation. These were easier to complete than anticipated. Amagansett Stone & Brick, located on Route 27, was very helpful in providing guidance and identifying individuals to help. They also installed a stone path to the greenhouse that has added to the appeal.

The hardest things to complete were installation of the electricity and gas-fired heating systems. After much research, we used Bates Electric to install the electrical outlets and lighting. While not the least expensive, the quality of the results suggests Bates was the right choice. They also installed the systems on time – unusual for the East End contractors. Bay Gas installed the propane tanks and ran gas lines for heating. (While we never again want to dig a trench to install a gas line, in retrospect, it was worth the pain!)

Weekends find me meandering in the greenhouse. The vanilla orchid grows rapidly; the ferns, bananas, and gardenias seem content. We dine on fresh herbs. I have a smile on my face!

If you have dreamed of year-round gardening, do not think twice. Make your dream a reality. You will not be sorry!

The Room For Rolicking Recreation

Got Rec Room? Most of us do, we just don't know it. In theory, a recreation room is a room in a house suited for games, dancing or other kinds of action. At best, a room equipped for informal entertaining. Unfortunately, with the chaos everyday life brings, rec rooms have become big junk drawers, evolving into the space where you throw everything you can't bring yourself to actually throw away. With that said, there are ways to remedy this current state of messiness, transforming that muddled storage closet into a full fledged, functioning and fun recreation room.

The first step, as always, is the hardest. Like the first week of a diet or trying to quit smoking. The scene is basically the same; a jungle of wires tangled like vines that would put a Celtic knot to shame. Dust bunnies that have multiplied like, well, rabbits. Boxes labeled "Spring Break Photos 1983." "Jr's T-ball Trophies." "Stuff." You must clean and organize the room.

Don't sweat step number one. The key to creating order is to have a place for everything and everything in a place. If space is an issue, use your walls. By mounting shelves, you are saving floor space and making use of an unused area. Pick one wall in the room, and mount shelves at different heights and lengths. This will not only give your books, trophies, knick knacks and dust bunnies a home, but also add dimension to the space. If you are wary about hanging things on walls, check out different standing units with different sized cubbies and shelves. Online stores like IKEA or even Wal-Mart offer plenty of storage options for your rec room.

When organizing, try to pick a unit that is going to best suit what the rec room is to be used for. If the room is going to be used as a study space, there are plenty of units that incorporate book shelves and computer desks into one compact piece. Find shelves that will best hold a computer and heavy books. Pick a unit with plenty of cubbies, and nooks for bills and letters. If the unit is going to be for entertaining, pick shelves with closed ends so DVDs, VHS tapes, CDs and video games won't fall out. Make sure the CD player, TV and game system will all fit. Keep all like things together and on one wall. It will make the room functional and more enjoyable.

Once you decide what wall the main unit is going to be on, put your lounging spot on the wall opposite it, especially if you are pressed for space. This leaves the middle of the room open, making the space look bigger. The futon is always a fun option. It is more affordable than a couch and folds out for overnight guests. However, if you have an extra couch, the rec room is the perfect place for it. If you are thinking that it's been in the basement or garage and is less-than suitable for your new room, think again. Make use of this beautiful fall and simply air the sucker out for a day. The wonders of Mother Nature never cease to amaze and after exposure to the cool, crisp wind, that old couch won't seem so old after all. Not to mention time has a way of transforming couches into lounges from heaven, so don't be so quick to toss it to the curb. Also, if you are less than thrilled about the floral print, take a visit to the Pottery Barn Outlet where, for under $50, you can pick up a solid couch cover that will make it look brand new.

For additional seating, throw three or four oversized pillows on the ground. Kids are notorious for sitting a nose length from the TV. Let them plop themselves on a pillow, leaving the couch free for the far-sighted. If the room has hardwood floors, pick up a huge solid area rug at Home Depot. They run anywhere from $25 to $60 and are the best way to cover up wood floors and ugly carpet. Also, for additional seating, don't forget to make use of windowsills. While we may be too big to fit in the tiny cubby, the nook is perfect for young kids. Throwing a cushion or even a body pillow in the sill offers a cozy reading area for children, and one that provides plenty of sunlight.

Now that the basics are covered, the fun begins. While kitchens, dining rooms, and bedrooms need certain components, the rec room is at the mercy of your imagination. There are traditional amenities associated with the space, the most common being the pool table. If you have a pool table, cheers. If not, find a fun piece and work off that. This is the area where you can splurge that overtime paycheck. Fun additions to a rec room could include a jukebox, an old arcade game, a foosball table or pinball machine. This will be the piece your decorating can spin off of. For example, if you opt for a jukebox, a fun idea might be to take all those old record albums and mount them on the wall. Pick out the ones that have the best artwork and create your own personalized mosaic mural of music. If movies are your thing, hit up Ebay and for around $5 a piece, pick out two or three of your favorite film posters. Go to Michaels, buy a poster frame for $18 and hang them on the walls. Old favorites like Casablanca, The Manchurian Candidate or Mr. Smith Goes to Washington always look sophisticated when framed.

If you have kids, let the room cater to their needs. Instead of hanging curtains, buy rolls of paper and slip them onto a wooden curtain rod. Let them color on the paper, and simply rip it off when they want to start something new. If you have some extra money to spend, a cool idea is tear up the floor in front of the TV and lay down black board from wall to wall. Get some chalk and let them go nuts. The possibilities are endless. Indoor hopscotch, tic tack toe, and hangman are all at their finger tips. It's easy to clean and you will be saving paper and trees in the process. Another innovative, but cheaper, idea is to cork an entire wall of the rec room. Anyone can by a roll of cork online. Get the proper measurements, order, and using a staple gun, tack the cork to the wall in sheets. Let your kids pin up their artwork, school projects or lunch schedules.

However you decide to decorate your rec room, just remember to keep it functional. Providing ample storage and lounging space will make everyone happy, and your new room will be the favorite and most comfortable in the entire house.

Buying Art At Home, For The Home

The immense presence of art on the East End was one of the first things I became aware of after moving to Hampton Bays. Living on my own for the first time, I acquired the habit of checking out other people's homes. From my observations, I learned that art not only fills an empty space, but it can add color and life to any room of the house. Before I left the nest, I had taken many things for granted. I went through my parent's house, room by room, grabbing whatever they were willing to spare for my new home. I was determined not to forget anything that I would need, including big mixing spoons and the popcorn-maker we had held onto since the early 80s. After a few months at my new location, it became apparent that I had made the right choice by taking the popcorn-maker, but my home was desperately lacking art. Vibrant-colored oil paintings like the ones that hung in my parent's house would truly give my little cottage a much-needed sense of "home."

From www.centuryfineart.com

Some residents of the Hamptons have their homes professionally decorated, but others (like me) choose to select and buy art themselves. But where do you start? For those new to the art scene or for those that might not have the time or money to spend in art galleries, the long-winded process of purchasing art can be quite complicated. Luckily, a company called Century Fine Art provides a service to make the process of selecting and buying art simple and convenient.

For the past 26 years, Century Fine Art has been servicing interior design firms and galleries with original oil paintings from Canada, France, and Portugal. The paintings would be displayed on easels, with lights situated above them, and then the paintings would be sold to the public for triple the price. Now, Century Fine Art has made it possible for homeowners to purchase oil paintings directly, at a much lower price than the firms and galleries sell them for.

"House calls" to East End residents started about 3 years ago. Century Fine Art facilitates this via their "Mobile Gallery." This is a method of transporting the quality oil paintings on a custom-built truck. The creativity and inspiration of Europe's finest artists can literally be brought right to your doorstep. This home appointment service allows homeowners to purchase wholesale art in the convenience of their homes. Century Fine Art brings the paintings into the client's home, to see how the pieces look in the actual space and to coordinate the pieces with the other elements. Their oil paintings are even on display in the homes of celebrities, including Oprah Winfrey and Michael Douglas. When Century Fine Art's services were requested at a Hamptons residence this past summer, they realized upon arrival that the client's home was actually a yacht.

With the holiday seasons approaching, Century Fine Art is the perfect way to give the gift of art. Selecting an oil painting meant for someone else's home is a very risky venture. You can never be too sure of someone's taste, or where they would want to display a painting given to them. Century Fine Art will send you or your loved one a digital catalog with over 200 oil paintings to choose from. Selections are then made via email, or you can call to reserve your selected item. Within one week, all purchases arrive framed, finished, and antiqued. Because Century Fine Art is wholesale only, there is no tax and no delivery charge.

Individual home consultations can be arranged, and Century Fine Art is also available for art shows. If selection, quality, convenience, and price are important to you in the choice of Original Oil Paintings for your home, contact Adam O'Donnell at Century Fine Art. 877-240-7207, or 678-261-4262. You can also reach him via email, adamsmart222@tmail.com.

Stuck In The 70s

Perhaps you're feeling Dazed And Confused about how to decorate a room, but "Happy Days" are here again. Yes, that's correct, even those oranges and greens of the 70s have re-surfaced. If you grew up in the 70s, then you know what I'm talking about. And, if you're too young, just turn on an episode of "That 70s Show."

Remember those shiny wallpaper prints? Not very attractive, but you could check your reflection if you need to. There are flamingos, bamboo, shiny foil wallpapers and much, much more. If you want to stay clear of wallpaper, but still see yourself in every room, may I suggest mirrors? They come in panel pieces or squares. If fact, you can mirror an entire room, if you dare. My mother had a lovely display on one wall in our dining room. I think the mirrors were tinted with a touch of smoky color, which created a slightly more subdued effect.

As for a dining space, I located a "Mod Space Age Dining set" in brown, of course. This molded plastic, "super cool" ensemble can be yours for $950 on the www.vintagelooks.com website. This set may look as though it was created after the "Jetsons" cartoon, but at least you never have to worry about staining your furniture.

Let's "Zoom" right over to our next space, the living room. The possibilities are endless. Vinyl, vinyl, vinyl. It seems that many flashback pieces of furniture from the 70s are made of vinyl. Again, I think vinyl can be a big plus in a home. It seems to last forever because you can clean your furniture with Windex. But comfort is another story, especially in the heat of summer.

On the "vintage looks" website, you can find an array of funky accessory pieces, couches and chairs available in an assortment of colors. For example, the Eames Style Arm Chair, priced at $75, or the vintage Mod Stool for $145, are fun additions to a couch. Let's not forget the Vintage Egg Chair Lounger designed by Arne Jacobean for $425 if you have a bigger budget. Or perhaps one of Herman Miller's designs may suit your needs. Move on to "The Love Boat," sorry, I mean the bedroom, where you'll want platform beds and lacquer dressers and headboards. Add a thick shag rug, funky lamps and some pop art wall prints will complete the room. There are many stores that replicate some of these furnishings. Jensen-Lewis in Manhattan has a variety of retro furniture. Located at 89 7th Avenue in Chelsea, www.jensen-lewis.com.

There are so many ways to bring the 70s back to your home without going all the way. Perhaps you just want to add a few accessories to your retro-looking kitchen. Pick up a set of rainbow designed dishes or yellow vintage storage containers. Thrift stores and yard sales are an excellent and fun way to locate some of these eclectic items. If you have a case of Saturday Night Fever, have fun transforming your living room or basement into a dance club. Break out the disco ball, the "Bee Gee's Greatest Hits" or "Peter Frampton Live," and have a party. A few other great resources include www.wickedelements.com, www.dansway-brandshop.com or www.funkysofa.com.

So, put on your satin jacket and platform shoes and jump in your Ford Pinto or Plymouth Duster and start shopping.

a box of American Olean Matte Biscuit tiles. The thought of making the pilgrimage back to the D-I-Y store was one I didn't want to contemplate after our last visit. As it turned out unless we were willing to wait a few weeks and continue showering outdoors…

Back in the same aisle where not two days before I had bent down and pulled out two extra boxes of tile, in front of me now was a gaping hole. The neatly lined up boxes of American Olean Matte Biscuit were gone. How could this be? Defeated, I rose up and, at eyelevel, spied an open box of singles. We grabbed every one we could find, hoping it would be enough to finish the job.

Our tiled bathroom looks sublime. The chrome fixtures sparkle. The wainscoting is agleam in raffia accented by neutral white walls tinged with beige, and the floor is a rustic terrazzo parchment. It was an interesting experience to be sure, but with any luck I hope not to play the roles of interior decorator, contractor, mediator, helper and delivery person at the same time.

dening to me. However, my cooking is confined to one pot, pan or wok. The plates and bowls are cream colored remnants from the Pottery Barn outlet, and the flatware is a mixed bag of heirloom sterling purchased from a pawnshop in South Carolina. However, together it all makes a welcoming place setting.

Often I am asked, "Would you prefer a larger place?"

I confess there are moments. But, they exist only when family and friends come to stay. Otherwise, this space suits Jasper and me just fine. We sleep under the stars and awaken to a different scene every morning.

I enjoy the solitude of winter, and have come to accept the inevitable popularity of summer, with its cacophony of deck talk and laughter that sifts through my screens. Walking along the shore with Jasper, watching the seagulls yo yo dive, the cormorants yodeling and spreading their wings to dry, I feel the luckiest person in the world. I do not have much, but lack for nothing.

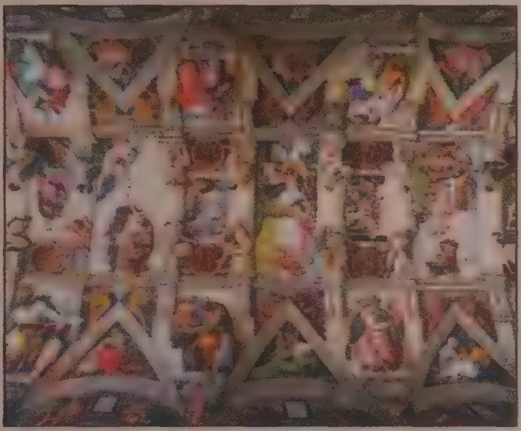
Heads Up

What are the first things you think about when setting about redecorating a room? Wallpaper or paint; carpeting, rug, or hardwood floor; fluffy sofa or wooden armchair? Maybe, though, it's time to look up. There's a whole other angle of this room that often goes overlooked unless it's leaking or falling down. The ceiling provides us the opportunity to express creativity in a space that is often ignored. And these less common forums for expression are the ones that really make an impression when they're utilized.

One of the most magnificent ceilings I've ever encountered is at the Palau Guell in Barcelona, designed by Antoni Gaudi. Gaudi is better known for his architecture, but his interior design and decorating were astounding as well. The ceiling of the main entertaining room in Palau Guell looks like a mosaic (Gaudi's trademark). But instead of his usual shattered ceramic, this is a calculated mosaic of precious wood panels. Interestingly, the room is divided into two sections: where the men played cards and where the women chatted. (It was the late 19th century.) Over the women's section is a beautiful ceiling displaying rich wood layered like a log cabin. However, above the men's precious heads is a much more elaborate design of woven wood.

Another ceiling, perhaps the most famous in the world, is that of the Sistine Chapel. Everyone who goes to the Vatican in Rome holds the ultimate destination as Michaelangelo's masterpiece. The Sistine Chapel depicts the story of the Bible, immortalized in shades of gold and pink, blue and cream. I imagine Michaelangelo dangling from the ceiling with a palette in his hand, creating The Creation as his image of God reaches out to touch his image of Adam.

All right, so you're beginning to think, "Nice art history lesson, but I am no Gaudi and I am no Michaelangelo." Perhaps true, but that doesn't mean that you can't transform your ceiling into a work of art, or at least a slightly interesting part of the room.



The ceiling of the Sistine Chapel

One of the hottest new ways of attending to your ceiling is actually a very old style. Tin ceilings were once used to decorate, and now they are making a comeback, this time in aluminum and copper. M-Boss, Inc (www.mbossinc.com) is a company that specializes in tin and copper ceilings, both the restoration and the initial production. M-Boss recently converted a historic building into a coffee house and art gallery, and the company made exact replicas of original patterns to cover the ceiling in copper.

"Our cost-effective replication process is especially ideal for insurance repairs and historic restorations," said Bill Perk, president of M-Boss Inc. "A lot of people who call have original tin ceilings with a corner or area that is damaged. They think the only option is to tear out the whole ceiling; but we can create new panels for them that will fit in seamlessly."

Another option for utilizing your ceiling is painting. This is particularly popular for babies or children's rooms. It's also common in rooms dedicated to yoga or meditation. But there is no reason why your rec room can't be brightened up with a baby blue ceiling adorned with fluffy white clouds. Some people think that painting the ceiling would create a claustrophobic feel, but it all depends on the color. A light, bright color like sky blue or pale yellow will only open up the room.

But this is the grand finale. Someday, in my dream house, I will open my eyes every morning to a glass ceiling. Not just a skylight. The whole ceiling will be a sheet of glass. I will come to look forward to rainy nights when I can fall asleep watching the rain slide across my field of vision. I will open my eyes to the sky in the morning. Gaudi and Michaelangelo had nothing on the wide open sky.

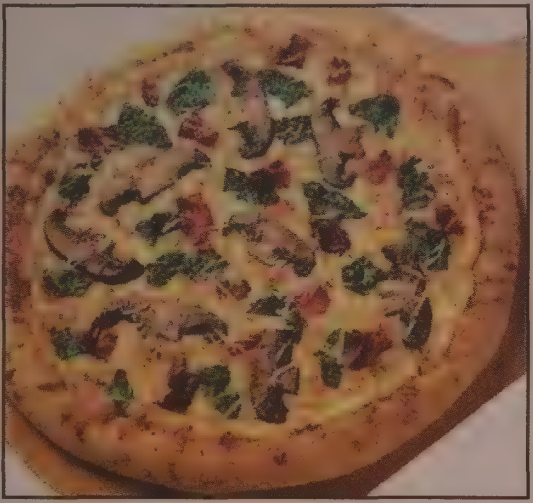
Homemade Pizza, For A Party Or Just A Person

One great thing about the onset of daylight saving time and the resulting almost midday darkness is indulging the impulse to eat hearty, warming food. Cozily shrinking into the couch cushions with a rich and comforting meal is a great pleasure of the cold weather months. The meals need not be elaborate – all that's required is that they are rich enough and, in my case, cheesy enough to be satisfying. Homemade pizza is a great choice, because it is easy fun, creative, and social, all at the same time. Of course, there is nothing wrong with a personal sized pizza, either…

Following are a few recipes from foodtv.com, the absolute ultimate in Internet cooking ideas. The recipes are "medium" in difficulty, but I'm sure they won't present too much of a challenge for most pizza lovers. You can find the basic pizza dough recipe at the end. Of course, there are hundreds of variations on toppings and cheeses, so have a ball experimenting. Also, you can make the first recipe vegetarian, by omitting the prosciutto (don't tell Tyler).



Mushroom and Three Cheese Pizza
Recipe courtesy Tyler Florence
Recipe Summary
Difficulty: Medium
Yield: 3 pizzas

1 recipe Pizza Dough, recipe follows
3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
2 slices prosciutto, sliced in strips
2 garlic cloves, chopped
2 fresh rosemary sprigs, needles stripped from the stem
1 pound assorted wild mushrooms, such as crimini, portobello, shiitake, and oyster, coarsely chopped
Kosher salt and freshly ground black pepper
2 (4-ounce) logs goat cheese
2 cups shredded fontina
1/2 cup freshly grated pecorino

Make the pizza dough as directed in the master recipe. Stick a pizza stone in the oven and preheat it to 500 degrees F.

Coat a sauté pan with the olive oil and place over medium heat. When the oil gets hazy, add the prosciutto strips, stir to render out the ham's fat and flavor. Toss in the garlic and rosemary, saute for a minute until fragrant. Add the mushrooms, cook and stir until they've released their moisture and are nicely browned, about 5 minutes; season with salt and pepper. Remove from the heat.

Crumble goat cheese evenly on the crust, scatter

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

I believe the only cure for the anticipation of daylight saving (with the promise of darker days ahead), coming up this weekend, is to enjoy the extra hour on Sunday morning lingering over brunch. And I'm thinking of Linda Slezak's delicious currant scones and vegetable breakfast strata.

Linda and her husband Jim are the proprietors of Red Barn B & B in Jamesport. When I visited with Linda this past spring I pulled up to a beautifully restored 1877 farm house once owned by Lemuel Beecher Hallock, grandson of one of the originating farm families on the North Fork. I recall a picturesque landscape of red, the color of the main house and several out-buildings on the sprawling grounds. Linda and Jim are warm and welcoming people, and Linda, I might add, a fine cook. She serves leisurely 3-course breakfasts with fresh local ingredients which change weekly, along with afternoon tea. With advance reservations Linda and Jim will arrange for a five-course wine pairing dinner for their house guests upon request. How appropriate since they are surrounded by North Fork vineyards and orchards. As I write this I think how nice it would be to take an unhurried break in one of Red Barn's charming and comfortable guest rooms all with private accommodations.

To linger over your own breakfast or brunch you might begin with baking up absolutely the simplest batch of perfect scones. To simplify your time, prepare the batter for the scones the night before and refrigerate. Roll out the dough the next morning, cut into desired shapes and bake. For the tomatoes and eggs, grill or broil the tomatoes then sauté the scallions and garlic and top with the tomatoes up to a couple of hours ahead. Finish the eggs just before serving. The vegetables for the strata can be prepared the night before and refrigerated. With the cheese grated and the bread cubed, the strata is a simple matter of assembly. Serve any combination of these recipes along with fresh fruit and juice, rich coffee and assorted teas. Now all you need are some hungry friends.

RED BARN B & B SCONES

Linda suggests the need for the fat content in the recipe to insure that the scones are fluffy and rich. I used regular half and half with excellent results.

Makes 12 scones

2 cups all-purpose flour
3 tablespoons sugar
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon baking powder
5 tablespoons cold unsalted butter in 1/4 inch slices
1 cup half and half or heavy cream
1/2 cup currants

Preheat oven to 425 degrees

1. In a mixing bowl whisk together the flour, sugar, baking soda, and salt. Cut the butter into the dry mixture with a pastry blender or two knives, cutting through until mixture resembles coarse pebbles. Do not overwork. With a flat wooden spoon, stir in the currants then stir in the cream until mixture holds together into a mass. Transfer to a lightly floured surface and pat down gently with a rolling pin to make a disk about 10-inches in diameter and about 1/2-inch thick. Cut into wedges or rounds with a 2 1/2-inch cookie cutter. Transfer to a cookie sheet and bake about 15 minutes until scones are a light golden brown and have risen. Transfer to a cooling rack until ready to serve.

GRILLED TOMATOES WITH SCRAMBLED EGGS AND CHIVES

This recipe was inspired by tomat con queso, a Greek Sephardic dish. If you like, add some crumbled feta cheese while cooking the eggs.

Serves 4-6

3 - 4 ripe but firm tomatoes
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
3-4 scallions, white and light green parts trimmed and thinly sliced
1 large clove garlic, finely chopped
8-10 large eggs
2 tablespoons thinly sliced fresh chives
2 tablespoons finely chopped flat-leaf parsley

1. Core and wipe tomatoes clean. Cut each one into 1/2-inch slices and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Grill or broil about 4 inches from source of heat about 2-3 minutes each side until charred slightly and just tender, not mushy. Transfer to a side dish with a spatula.

2. Melt butter in a 12-inch non-stick skillet and put in the scallions and garlic. Sauté for 3-4 minutes until scallions are tender but not brown. Place the tomatoes in a single layer over the scallions and turn off heat if doing ahead. (Can be prepared up to an hour or so ahead to this point.)

3. When ready to serve, beat eggs and chives together and season with salt and pepper. Return skillet with the scallions and tomatoes to medium heat and pour in the eggs. Cook, stirring with a wooden spoon pulling in sides of uncooked egg until mixture forms soft curds, about 3-4 minutes. Sprinkle with parsley and serve hot.

Pizza

sauteed mushrooms all around, and top with shredded fontina. Slide the pizza onto the hot stone in the oven and bake for 12 to 15 minutes, until the crust is golden and crisp, and the cheese is bubbly.

Before cutting the pizza into slices, grate pecorino over the thing!

Chicago Style Italian Sausage and Pepper Deep Dish Pizza

Recipe courtesy of Emeril Laggase, 1999
Yield: 2 (12-inch) pizzas

2 tablespoons olive oil
4 cups thinly sliced yellow onions
Salt
Freshly ground black pepper
4 cups thinly sliced green bell peppers
1 pound Italian sausage links, cut into 1/2-inch pieces
1 recipe of Basic Pizza Dough
12 ounces grated mozzarella cheese
2 cups tomato sauce
2 tablespoons dried oregano

Preheat the oven to 400 degrees F. In a large saute pan, over medium heat, add the oil. When the oil is hot, add the onions. Season with salt and pepper. Saute for 2 minutes. Add the peppers. Season with salt and pepper. Continue to saute for 3 minutes. Remove from the heat and set aside. In a large saute pan, over medium heat, add the sausage and render for 4 to 6 minutes. Remove and drain on paper towels. Divide the dough in half and roll into a 14-inch circle, about 1/2-inch thick. Press the dough into 2 greased 12-inch deep-dish pizza pans. Sprinkle each pizza with 6 ounces of the grated cheese. Spoon 1/2 of the onion and pepper mixture over each pizza. Sprinkle 1/2 of the sausage over the onion mixture on each pizza. Spread 1 cup of the tomato sauce over the top of each pizza. Sprinkle each pizza with 1 tablespoon of oregano. Bake the pizzas for 25 to 30 minutes or until golden brown. Remove the pizza from the oven and cut into individual servings.

Pizza Dough:
1 tablespoon active dry yeast
6 cups high-gluten flour
2 1/2 teaspoons kosher salt
Extra-virgin olive oil

Sprinkle the yeast over 1/2 cup warm (105 to 110 degrees F) water and allow it to dissolve and activate, about 5 minutes.

Combine the flour and salt and mound it onto a cool work surface creating a high walled well in the center. Combine the yeast mixture with 1 1/2 cups of cool water and pour into the well. Slowly begin to mix the water and flour, a little at a time, moving your fingers in short, counter clockwise circles around the border of the water. When the dough is firm enough to hold it's shape, scrape the remaining flour over it and knead until the mass is smooth and shiny, approximately 7 minutes.

Transfer the dough to a bowl that has been brushed with olive oil. Brush the top of the dough with olive oil to prevent a skin from forming, cover the bowl with plastic wrap, and let rise in a warm place away from drafts until doubled in bulk, about 2 hours. Punch down the dough and knead once more. Let the dough rise again for about 40 minutes, punch down again and form dough into 4 balls.

RED BARN B & B VEGETABLE BREAKFAST STRATA

This layered vegetable strata makes a substantial dish for a leisurely breakfast.
Serves 6

2 tablespoons butter
1 onion, finely chopped
3 cups sliced crimini mushrooms
6 large eggs
1/2 cup low-fat sour cream
1/2 cup milk
1 teaspoon salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
6 slices bakery fresh white bread cut into cubes
1 pound asparagus trimmed, cut into 2-inch pieces and steamed until barely tender
1 cup grated Monterey Jack cheese
Paprika (optional)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees.

1. Melt 1 tablespoon butter in a skillet and sauté the onion and mushrooms until onion is tender and mushrooms have given off their liquid. Remove from heat and let cool.

2. In a mixing bowl, beat the eggs with sour cream, milk, salt and pepper to taste. With remaining butter, grease a gratin dish and place one-half the bread cubes on the bottom. Spread one-half of the onion/mushroom mixture and half the asparagus over the cubed bread and sprinkle with one-half of the grated cheese. Repeat with remaining vegetables and bread and pour over the egg mixture. Top with remaining cheese and sprinkle with paprika, if using. Bake in preheated oven for 30 minutes and serve hot.

Hypnotism: Trick or Treatment?

Conjure up the thought of hypnotism and one can not help but recall cheesy stage acts where a hypnotist, with a snap of his finger, puts unsuspecting people in a trance and makes them perform silly, embarrassing acts like taking off most of their clothes or doing the chicken dance. Of course, people do those goofy things even when fully conscious or, at the very least, with the excuse of being under the influence of a bottled potable. Yet, the idea of losing control is both frightening and seductive in its potential liberation. After all, what truly lurks behind the masks we create for ourselves? How accountable are we for our behavior?

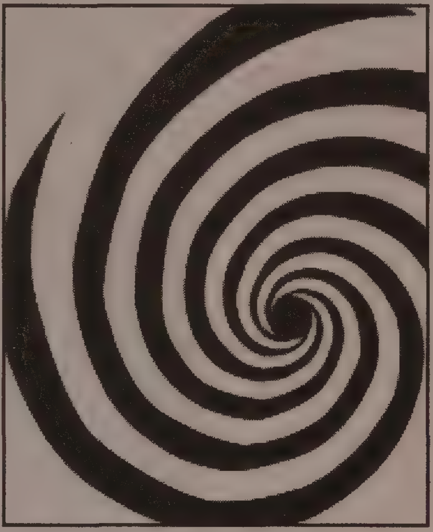
Seeking answers, I knocked at the door of Dr. Gary Ahlskog, a respected psychologist and a psychoanalyst with practices in East Hampton and New York City. No charlatan, Dr. Ahlskog is also a Master Hypnotist.

A soft spoken man, he is an advocate for hypnotism as a tool to help people alleviate symptoms, such as pain and phobias. His enthusiasm is based on the success he personally experienced while trying to quit smoking after thirty-two years.

"I had failed reliably and spectacularly at every possible method of stopping…I didn't seem to have the right motivation, the right willpower..."

Then eighteen months ago, Dr. Ahlskog tried hypnosis. He entered the session in a state of withdrawal feeling "physiologically awful" having snuffed out his last cigarette 20 hours earlier. Forty-five minutes later, he walked out feeling "physically wonderful," with no craving to light up, and has not smoked since. Most remarkable of all, he has not even thought about it.

"It stunned me that anything could possibly work that powerfully and quickly," he says. Two weeks later he took up an invitation to learn self-hypnosis. It was then decided to integrate the technique into his practice.



Dr. Ahlskog is quick to dispel the sense of hocus pocus surrounding hypnosis, and he is emphatic that it is not about somebody else taking over another's mind. A more accurate explanation is that hypnosis helps to "distract the consciousness so that the subconscious can take over." Patients are always completely aware of what is taking place and can remember everything. The hypnotic trance occurs at the alpha level, that place we experience just before falling asleep.

After going under, Dr. Ahlskog met up with his subconscious mind and had what he terms "a very friendly conversation" that took him back to the first impulse for a cigarette. He was always consciously aware he was in a hypnotic state and also simultaneously aware of silent thoughts he hadn't had for over thirty-two years. With the hypnotist's guidance, Dr. Ahlskog was able to harness the power of his own unconscious mind in quelling the desire to smoke. Once out of the trance, he felt as if he had never smoked.

"I came out a non-smoker. It was not will power. It was not a struggle. It was letting my unconscious mind take over," he says.

In addition to helping people stop smoking, Dr. Ahlskog also uses hypnosis to tackle phobias, such as fear of elevators, bridges, and cracks in the sidewalk. Some therapists view hypnosis as a cheap shortcut that doesn't get at the crux of the problem, but Dr. Ahlskog disagrees. Part of removing a symptom is calling upon the unconscious mind during the trance to clarify the original powerful intent for the symptom. Usually, it was never intended to be harmful, and once the intent is revealed, it is acknowledged and "reframed."

In Dr. Ahlskog's case, his addiction started when he entered college and observed the other young men in his dorm. As they sat around swapping stories and smoking, they had a vivacious liveliness he hadn't previously encountered in life. For him, cigarettes

The Many Joys Of The Spa

I will never understand why more men don't go to day spas for pampering. Whether you get a massage, a facial, a manicure or a pedicure, you will leave looking and feeling better. And there is so much more to the experience than just the end result. The time spent at a spa is so enjoyable. It is like being whisked away to a far-away place where the mundane troubles of daily life are barely a memory. You can go alone and sink into a nearly trance-like state of relaxation, or you can go with a friend or special someone, and enjoy the experience together.

My spa of choice is La Carezza on Windmill Lane in Southampton Village. I started going there because it is fairly close to where I live, but I enjoy it so much that I would continue to go there even if I moved to Montauk. It is quite large, with one side dedicated to hair services, the middle dedicated to manicures and pedicures, and the other side dedicated to private rooms for massages and facials. Like all good spas, it has a certain serenity and aroma that conveys a sense of peace. La Carezza offers a full array of facials, body treatments and scrubs, massages, hydrotherapy treatments, hair styling and waxing services, and nail services, for women and men. It is usually essential to make appointments in advance.

My most recent trip there was particularly enjoyable, as I went with Robin Smith, the managing editor of this paper, for a pedicure and manicure. We sat next to each other in the comfortable pedicure seats, catching up about our lives, sharing experiences and solving world hunger (okay, maybe not that last part). The pedicure starts with a hot Jacuzzi for the feet, and then Maria and Costanza (two of the many fantastic specialists) went to work. While part of a pedicure can tickle a bit, most of it is pure bliss. Robin and I were not next to each other for our manicures, so I spent my time chatting with Maria and staring into space enjoying the sensations of someone working on my hands. When I was done, I pulled a chair next to Robin, whose work took longer than mine, as her nails were being polished. Afterwards, we were too relaxed to think about going back to our lives, so we stopped off for a bite, to ease ourselves back into civilization.

Another time, I was at La Carezza for a pedicure/manicure on a Saturday morning during the summer. That was a true kick, because the spa was packed with women of all ages and types (and some men) getting primped and polished for whatever benefit or party was scheduled for that evening. While relaxing in my pedicure chair, I just listened to the many conversations and watched the hubbub, and tried to imagine where people would go that night and what type of lives they lived. Some of the people seemed to have come out of central casting for Hampton socialites, while others seemed more down-to-earth, and there was even a 15-year-old girl. I, too, had an event that night, but I do not remember anything about it. All I recall about that day are the spa treatments.

Unfortunately, I am long overdue for a facial and massage, which are such wonderful treats. I always ask for Angelina when I get a facial, because she is both amazingly talented and a delightful conversationalist. To lie back in a private room, with soft music and dim lights, while someone cleans and rubs and massages your face and neck is to experience a piece of Heaven. And nothing beats a full-body massage. Having someone massage away your stress, tension, and knots is truly amazing.

Women know all of this; they represent a large majority of the clientele of most spas, including La Carezza. The men I see at spas tend to be hyphenated sexuals – you know: metro-, homo-, bi-. As for all you real-men-don't-eat-quiche types, you have no idea what a great pleasure you are missing. Give it a try! If I see you there, I promise not to tell anyone.

–David Stoll

were a symbol of freedom from a stuffy childhood. When he came out of his trance, Dr. Ahlskog had gotten rid of the urge to smoke, but kept hold of the original positive intent to truly seize all that life has to offer.

When asked who can be hypnotized, Dr. Ahlskog replies simply "anyone who wishes to be, can be, and anyone who doesn't want to be, can't be." He reiterates that the mind will never allow a person to do something he doesn't want to do.

Impressed, I leave eager to try and book an appointment. In my next article, I take the plunge and go under.

A New Pair Of Kicks

Sandals are out. We've got to accept that the time has come to cover up our little toes. And I, personally, am not a fancy kind of girl. I like to be comfortable and stylish all at once. I also like to run around without feeling like I'm going to fall and break my neck. And occasionally, I like to play a pick-up game of basketball. In conclusion, for these chilly days, I need a nice pair of sneaks.

The sneaker market is one of the greatest in the United States. It is a $13 billion per year industry, selling over 350 million pairs of sneakers annually. But remember those little white sneakers that started it all? Keds were the first sneakers in the world, manufactured as a product of US rubber in 1917. Eventually, Converse overtook Keds as the primary sneaker. Remember professional basketball in the 1960s? Today it looks awkward to see a bunch of towering men in knee-high socks and canvas Converse sneakers, but back then it was more than the style – it was the only real option.

Today, a true sign that a basketball player has achieved legendary status is when he has his own sneaker. Air Jordans were the first of this phenomenon, and now there are so many players with sneakers that SneakerCenter.com had a poll to find out whose would be most popular this year. According to an online survey, 56% believed that LeBron James' sneaker would sell best, and 17% thought Allen Iverson would dominate the sneaker market. LeBron James, recently out of high school and now giving the Cleveland Cavaliers hope for greatness, signed a contract with Nike for $90 million to promote their shoes.

The wide variety of available sneakers developed further in the exercise-crazed 1980s, when running shoes like Asics and New Balances ascended. Asics were first produced in 1949, under the philosophy of "bringing up sound youth through sports." New Balance began at the turn of the 19th century in Boston by an English immigrant who ventured to help people with foot problems by creating a shoe that supported the arch. But these two brands got much more popular as exercising became the craze. Skateboarding shoes like Vans also surfaced as a comfortable way to surf the pavement.

Today, our options are open in terms of selecting the right sneaker. The most important thing is to consider the primary use. When I played basketball, I only wore my Nikes on the court. I didn't even wear them on the way to practice. They were designed for the polished hardwood floors of a gym. But now that I am no longer competitive, I am looking for a shoe that feels comfortable and looks cool. And I want to feel free to hop on a skateboard at any given moment. However, I don't need to be defying gravity while I'm making dinner, so I am no longer spending a week's salary on a pair of basketball sneaks.

Converse has been in existence for over 90 years and, while the company lost its monopoly on the basketball industry to Nike, it has adapted with the times. The casual shoes that Converse produces are attractive, comfortable, and very popular. For the winter months, Converse has produced knee-high kicks lined with shearling fur.

Vans are probably the most popular alternative sneaker, designed for extreme sports like skateboarding. They are also great for just roaming the streets on foot. You can design your own Vans at the website: Vans.com. You get to choose what colors or patterns will be on the tongue, the heel, t he toe, and the sides.

Skechers sneakers are really funky, coming in a wide variety of styles and colors. Unfortunately, since Skechers is more of a shoe company, their sneakers are not good for real physical activity at all. But if you're looking for aesthetic value and comfort, they are a great option.

Saying goodbye to your comfy flip-flops doesn't have to be so hard when you've got a cool, comfortable pair of sneakers to slide into. So embrace your own style,, cater to your own comfort, and get yourself a nice pair of new kicks.

Real Estates by Diane Strecker

A million dollars buys a fairly standard home by Hamptons standards, where the meaning of luxury has taken on a whole new meaning. There was a time when luxury amenities such as heated pools, Jacuzzis, spas and saunas wowed East End buyers. Today, those same things would be considered standard features and, in the luxury market, buyers look for amenities far more unique. They now look for home theatres, entertainment and recreational areas and private baths in most every bedroom. J.R Siwicki, principal broker of Hamptons Realty Group's Water Mill office, says, "Buyers are increasingly requesting that each bedroom have its own bath."

And, Hunt Han of Hamptons Realty Group finds that buyers looking to later rent their homes look for more than one master suite in order to appeal to prospective renters.

Stan Esposito from Hamptons Realty Group's East Hampton office says that he has seen an increased demand for security systems, leak detection devices and temperature sensors in the higher end homes. He says, "Owners want a complete house, that's ready to move into, with finished landscaping and sprinkler systems."

It has also become common in the area for buyers to buy homes just for the land or locale and then tear down the existing home to build new and custom. Pat O' Donaghue of HRG's Southampton office said that a 1920s home in Southampton recently sold for $2 million. "The buyers tore it down and kept only the pool and stone pool house."

The average home sale in the Hamptons, for the typical family home, is now approximately a million dollars. If you position it nearby a body of water, it creeps upward from there, all according to what body of water and where. A fairly common shingle style home in the Hamptons, consisting of 5 bedrooms, 5 baths, on about an acre, goes for $2. 5-3 million. In Montauk or Westhampton Beach you can find some oceanfront at that price but pretty much all in between runs higher. Georgica Pond or the Southampton oceanfront prices can easily move the millions into double digits, according to amenities.

Estates for sale such as the famed Three Ponds Farm, the highest priced piece of real estate on the entire East End, originally listed at $70 million, is situated on 60 acres that includes three ponds (stocked with fish), a golf course, 14 gardens, a 75' pool and pool pavilion, 12,000 sq ft home with 8 bedrooms and 12 baths, a guest cottage, barns, a storage silo and tennis courts.

The Burnt Point Estate on Georgica Pond has 2024 ft of waterfront, has an 18,000 sq ft residence on 25 acres that is private and gated. Its amenities include a tennis court with a viewing pavilion, a professional greenhouse, 2 barns, a boathouse, a dock, a waterside and water view heated pool with a whirlpool and waterfall. It has 8 bedrooms and 12 baths. The property was listed earlier this year at $50 million.

Estates such as Goose Creek, priced at $24 million, also on Georgica Pond, have luxury amenities such as a 110 seat movie theatre, a full service Roman spa, indoor lap pool, gym, massage and tanning salon. There is a billiard room, all weather tennis court, reception room with a bar, wine cellar, library, atrium, and 6 car garages. There are separate maid's quarters. The home is 25,000 sq ft and has 8 bedrooms and 12 baths. The property consists of 5.3 acres.

HAVE A SEAT
Dear Dan,

I was visiting Montauk on 9/11 and saw the benches outside the lighthouse and am curious to know who they are in memory of?

REAL ESTATE RENTAL
Dear Dan,

During 2002 I placed an ad for renting my residence, successfully, through Dan's Papers and the client rented for two summers.

Thanks, Dan Rattiner. I think I'll read your paper for another thirty years!

Roy Gerardi
Via e-mail

Hope you rent it again sooner than that. –D.R.

ALMA MATER
Dear Dan,

Got a kick out of your article about crossing Shelter Island to catch the ferry to go to Boston. We too have a son at NEU - how about a column supporting a ferry from New London to East Hampton? Cross Sounds estimate of number of riders crossing Shelter Island going to and from South Fork to ferry is probably low-especially in the non-tourist season. I meet a large number of locals when crossing to New England. It would reduce traffic greatly.

Thanks.

(University of Rochester two years after you – that's how long I have been reading your stuff or seeing your cartoons)

Maybe the ferries can just putter around and around.–D.R.

FOLLOW UP
Dear Dan,

Why didn't you say what the license number was? My cousin is supervisor at the DMV and she can run the number and tell me the vehicle owner's name!

BTW, I've found that on holiday weekends when the ferry line is likely to be really long, it's faster to just go around Westhampton.

Love Dan's Papers.

CELEBRATE YOUR SURROUNDINGS
Dear Dan,

Thank you for printing a picture of our event held at Three Mile Harbor.

The Three Mile Harbor Celebratory Event and Benefit for Boys & Girls Harbor, the Pollock-Krasner House, the East End Classic Boat Society and the Springs Historical Society held on August 22 was indeed an afternoon savored by all who attended. The local wines, cheeses, seafood, the sunset overlooking Gardiner's Marina and music were magnificent. The picture shows you wearing your famous hat and Tony Duke. Too bad you cropped out my husband, Dick Mendelman, from the picture. He is the patriarch or our talented, God-blessed family and brought us here in 1970 to settle in at the Harbor Marina.

The reason for this letter concerns your identifying Lynn Mendelman as the author of my book, Three Mile Harbor – East Hampton's Priceless Gem. This pictorial history was written by Sylvia Mendelman and teamed with the artistic ability of my daughter, Diane Hewett, for its layout and design. Although my other daughter Lynn has authored and published a thesis for her studies as a Doctor of Molecular Biology at Harvard, she was not involved in the creation of my book, but has been very supportive of its creation.

The book arrived on the shores of Three Mile Harbor during last year's hurricane, "Isabelle". It has literally taken East Hampton "by storm". The book is on sale at our family's Harbor Marina Store, at the foot of Gann Road.

Sylvia Mendelman
East Hampton

This is a wonderful book.–D.R.

A STAR IS BORN?
Dear Dan,

Each time I read an article written by you, I just can't get Larry David out of my mind. HBO has great shows. One of my favorite shows is Curb Your Enthusiasm. The star is Larry David. It is sheer enjoyment full of laughs. He gets into situations that the average person would never encounter.

The article A Case Of Road Rage and the day you misplaced your boat, well just to mention a few where sheer entertainment for your devoted readers.

The writers from HBO might be interested. You never know, just remember where the idea came from.

I am a devoted fan.

Rose Vignola

Give me a toy and, always, something happens. –D.R.

Police Blotter

Central Air Blocks Radio Waves? A resident on Dayton Lane in the village of East Hampton reported that his radio reception was being interrupted by his neighbor's air conditioning and called in authorities. The police had no choice but to inform the irked radio listener that owning an air conditioner was not a crime…just yet.

Teen Swig-ler Busted for Attempted Barley Popping. According to East Hampton Village Police reports, a youth was busted by a Waldbaum's store manager for attempting to slink out of the store with a bottle of beer. I am not sure which is worse…getting caught or having the police phone Mother.

Roomies Rumble Over Remote. You know winter is approaching Montauk when…an argument between two otherwise compatible roommates erupts in blows over a television remote. Apparently two friends who share living space on Edgemere Road in Montauk wrestled each other for control of the remote resulting in a visit by authorities to break up the tumble. One can only hope they'll find a better, more amicable way to resolve further viewing disputes.

Heads Or Tails The Result Is The Same. Here's a case where the call of the coin proved hard to resist. Imagine thinking no one would notice…a few missing coins. Apparently such a thought crossed the mind of an employee of Ronald Webb Construction, which is located on Floyd Street in East Hampton. According to East Hampton Town Police reports, the coin crook admitted to sneaking in after hours in order to steal some $3,000 worth of coins, a few of which were rare.

"Reefer Madness." A visit by East Hampton Town Police resulted in misdemeanor charges for the "Tin Man." As the case unfolds, it appears authorities went to this Springs man's home on a matter unrelated to drugs, but once on the premises discovered a tin chock full of marijuana. Jackpot! After spending the night in the clink, the man was released on his own recognizance the next morning and charged with possession of marijuana in the fifth degree.

Ought To Be Ashamed. It seems Miss Manners would have a lot to say to neighbors of a woman living on Crystal Drive. According to East Hampton Town Police reports, near-by residents have been repeatedly yelling for her (and her children) to sell their house and move back to their native country. After one neighbor came forward and said he would stop this craziness, the woman decided not to press charges. I only wonder if any of the residents on the block are familiar with the story of the "settlers" and the first Thanksgiving…

Stealing Green at Gansett Green Manor. A woman visiting a friend at this Amagansett B&B left her purse on the seat of her car. When she returned not more than five minutes later, the bag and contents were gone.

Boo! Be Careful Around Those Bushes… Perhaps it was a slip of the tongue, but when a landscaper was questioned about a bill by one of his customers on Dayton Lane in East Hampton Village, he threatened to "haunt" her.
